

The National Outlook The Summit And The Business Trend

By RALPH ROBEY

It was inevitable that many persons would conclude that failure of the Summit Conference would have a direct and broad influence upon the business trend. Such a conclusion is unwarranted. It is unwarranted because there never was any sound reason for assuming that significant results could come from the conference.

In the disarmament meeting, which has been going on for some months, the Russians have clearly shown that they are not interested in relieving world tensions. Since the same Soviet officials make the decisions for those discussions and the Summit Conference, it was to be expected that no greater concessions would be forthcoming at the summit.

A Clear Forewarning
The "sweetness" of Khrushchev when he visited this country lasted only until he got back in his own nation. Almost immediately after he returned home Khrushchev began to talk in belligerent tones and from then on he had nothing friendly to say about the United States. Whether this was the result of internal Russian dissension, as widely thought, or merely Khrushchev changing his mind, is of no particular importance. In either event it was a clear forewarning that Russia would make no concessions of significance at the summit.

The U-2 plane incident, while unfortunate, was not the cause of the failure of the conference. It merely provided a convenient excuse for Khrushchev to blast the United States and make demands of Eisenhower which the President could not even consider meeting. That such a blast was going to be made was known the day before it was given, which is one of the reasons that Eisenhower could sit through it without losing his temper.

The Soviets had agreed to a summit conference in the hope that they could drive a wedge between the Western allies. They tried all types of means for accomplishing this, and every effort was a failure. This meant that, in the Russian mind, there was no reason for a conference.

Attitude of the Administration
The Administration, including the military and the Budget Bureau, had never assumed that the conference would either end or materially change the cold war. In making up the budget, accordingly, it was deemed necessary to provide the funds essential to maintain our own deterrent power. Whether the correct amount was asked for, and whether the distribution of the total was proper, are questions which would have been asked regardless of the summit, and the answers have not been altered by the failure of the conference.

Since the Administration was correct in its basic assumption, it is standing behind its original requests. The Congress, as always, will change the distribution somewhat, but the total will probably be quite close to the original budget item.

In so far as the business trend is concerned, therefore, the only effect we shall see from failure of the Summit Conference is that some particular companies may get a few larger orders, but this will be at the expense of other companies getting smaller orders. And that, it should be added, would have happened regardless of the Summit failure because the Congress would have shifted amounts in the military budget in any event.

In brief, the outlook for business previous to the Summit was a slow, gradual rise, and that still is the outlook.

The Rev. Clyde Beatty, Rector of St. John's The Evangelist Episcopal Church, in his message to 4-H Club members at their annual 4-H Church Sunday, June 5th, based his meditation on Ephesians 6:11 — Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. Rev. Beatty was introduced by J. B. Small.

A large attendance of 4-H Club members, parents, 4-H leaders and friends were at Central Hill Chapel Church to hear Rev. Beatty give a very helpful and interesting message. Some points I remember include: The explanation of the power of the devil, how crafty he is in keeping us from doing the things we ought to do. Then we were told that we must put on the whole armor of God with our heads. Turn to God with our minds. Daily we must pray, read and study our Bibles. Seek wisdom and understanding. We must worship in His church in order to know the will of God. We must stand up for Jesus and be counted in what we do wherever we are. We must put on the whole armor of God with our hearts. Love always guides and directs us. We must love our enemies and pray for all. Some things that matter most are love, mercy, long suffering and forgiveness. We must offer our lives to God. Giving is the secret of usefulness. Our lives become dead if we always receive and never give. We must put on the whole armor of God and stand up for Jesus Christ.

The call to worship and prayer were given by William Welch, president of the 4-H County Council. Olivia Harrell gave the Purpose of 4-H Church Sunday. Talks on "Life Dares Youth To Live" were given by Anne Frinks who discussed "I Pledge"; O. C. Holley, on "My Head To Clearer Thinking"; Brenda Johnson, "My Heart To Greater Loyalty"; Vann Flemming, "My Hands To Larger Service"; Jessie Overton, "My Health To Better Living" and Petrie Simons, "My Club, My Community and My Country." The Scripture lesson was read by Charlie Boyce. Special music was rendered by the Center Hill Community Chorus.
