

WITH THE FARM WOMEN

by MAIDRED MORRIS

Women Study Practical Politics
What do you know about politics? Home Demonstration Club women in Perquimans County decided they needed to know more about practical politics.

According to Miss Ila Grey Mellwean, home economics agent, the women joined with another organization in having a course in political science. The citizenship leaders from each club were asked to attend the course and learn more about political organizations, procedure and opportunities in the community.

United Nations Meal
Former delegates of the United Nations tour recently met for a luncheon to plan United Nations observance in Stanly County and to brief the delegate which will go this year. Mrs. Ira Lefler of Norwood was the first delegate in 1953. Miss Elizabeth Watson, home economics agent, says each person prepared a dish from recipes in the United Nations cookbook. The menu consisted of American ham, picante de maiz (Chilean spiced corn, Chile), string beans (Uruguay), ensalada de gacamole (avocado salad, Guatemala), Vienna hard rolls, Brazilian coffee and karethopeta (walnut cake, Greece).

Conserving Apples
Mrs. Delbert Swann of Caswell County has prepared and dried apples. After they are dry, she stores them in glass jars. Mrs. Swann reports she has not had any trouble with insects.

Miss Louise Homewood, home economics agent, reports many of the home demonstration women have used canneries this year in conserving their plentiful supply of fruits and vegetables.

Quality Fig Preserves
"By quality, one means peeling figs to preserve, weighing figs and using accurate measurements of sugar plus lemon juice," says Mrs. Ann Davenport, home economics agent in Tyrrell County. "Another important thing being stressed is to process preserves."

Mrs. Davenport has been stressing the proper way to make good quality fig preserves. Mrs. R. L. Mitchell of Columbia declared, "I'd rather have one pint of peeled fig preserves than five pints of unpeeled ones. The quality and taste is so much better."

Savings Noted on 4-H Projects
Rebecca Parker, 19-year-old 4-H girl of Meadow community in Johnston County, has completed information on all projects completed in eight years of 4-H Club work. She included the value, expense and savings from these projects.

Mrs. Peggy Stallings, assistant home economics agent, says Rebecca has saved her family approximately $9,500 through her 4-H homemaking projects. The largest savings were in clothing and food preparation.

Each One Bring One Home Demonstration Club

women in Lincoln County furthered their cooperation with health agencies by sponsoring the bloodmobile program for the October visit.

Mrs. Charlotte Rumley, home economics agent, says the women used as their motto, "Each One Bring One." Each woman was asked to give blood plus getting one over person to give.

Good Advice Department
A kind hearted old man saw a little boy trying to reach a door bell. He rang the bell for the little boy, then asked, "What now, my young friend?" "Run like mad," said the little boy. "That's what I'm going to do."

The worst-tempered people I've ever met were people who knew they were wrong.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Atheism is no longer the fashionable fad it once was. And even those "scientific" minds that subscribed to a disbelief in God—even they had the conviction of their disbelief to cling to. Man must have something to believe in, even if he fastens on non-belief to steer his life by! But nowadays nearly everyone says, "Yes, I believe in God." But is he for us the supreme fact and the object of our supreme concern, as he should be? Only too often our standard of values center around the "practical" concerns of life—money, position, prestige—when in reality our standards should be those which concern the good life, the soul.

To keep in touch with God, we must truly give him the place he deserves in our thoughts and in our concerns. As the psalmist suggests, we must recognize that God deserves our hospitality.

God is humble. He never commands with the voice of a dictator. He "waits our word." He is known only as a friend is known. We must spend time in his company, opening our hearts and our innermost thoughts to him, come to share his thoughts and hopes, purposes and plans, and delight to be with him if we would know him.

And having concluded that to keep in touch with God we must give him the place he deserves in our thoughts and concerns, and must also consider him worthy of our hospitality, we must also accept the fact that this is a discipline within our reach.

To hold the thought of God foremost does not distract, but rather improves the mind. It gives depth and range to our thinking, and provides us with an adequate perspective. It stands guard against the distortions of passion and the blindness of self-interest.

Every one of us who cares enough to begin and persist through failure without discouragement can, through God's most rewarding of all human ventures—that of keeping in touch with God.
