

KNOW YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

John T. Grooms, representative of the Social Security Administration, is in Edenton every Thursday at the North Carolina Employment Security Commission office in the Citizens Bank Building.

Does the Social Security Administration have an accurate record of your earnings or self-employment income? You hope so. Your future social security benefits depend on accurate reporting of your earnings, but what are you doing about finding out?

Are you letting this responsibility slide by and hoping that when you retire all of your earnings will have been reported? If you die, are you willing to have your family get lower benefits, or no benefits at all, simply because your employer failed to report your earnings? If you become disabled and cannot work, are you going to need these benefits. Will you get them. All of them?

If you don't have good answers to these questions, you had better start doing something about it... today.

You cannot protect your valuable old-age, survivors, and disability insurance rights by making sure your earnings are reported and credited to your social security account regularly. Start by making certain that each and every employer has your full name as shown on your social security card and your correct social security number, your total earnings, and also that a 3 percent reduction for social security has been made. This may show as an FICA or OAIIB deduction.

If you are self-employed, you can start by showing your full name and correct social security account number on the Schedule SE of your Federal income tax return.

John Harrell Now Second Lieutenant

John W. Harrell, son of Mrs. L. B. Harrell of Corapeake, has recently been commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the United States Army. Lt. Harrell received his second lieutenant bars in graduation exercises on October 11 at Army's Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga. Prior to entering officer candidate school last January, Lt. Harrell served as an Army food inspector in Washington, D. C. Meat and Hygiene School in Chicago, Ill.

Lt. Harrell, who is a graduate of Sunbury High School, entered the Army in August, 1958, and received basic training at Fort Jackson, S. C. He is married to the former Miss Mary Grant of Greenville, S. C., who accompanied her husband while he attended officers school. She was on hand to witness the ceremonies. Following his commission Lt. Harrell will be stationed at Fort Benning, Ga., where he will be assigned to the United States Army Infantry Center to resume new duties. Lt. and Mrs. Harrell spent a week with his mother.

return. You can make sure your correct net earnings are shown and that the tax has been paid.

The social security law requires every employer to report the wages paid to you for work covered by social security. The law also requires him to keep accurate records, to file the necessary reports and to pay the social security tax of 3 percent deducted from your wages and a matching 3 percent out of his own pocket.

How do you find out if your employer is reporting your earnings? How do you find out if your self-employment earnings are being credited to your social security account? It's easy. Ask your nearest social security office for a postcard form to use in getting a statement of your earnings. On the postcard show your name and address, date of birth, and your social security number. After signing your name, put a stamp on it and mail it.

You will receive a statement from the central social security record-keeping headquarters in Baltimore, Maryland, showing your total earnings as reported by your employers, or as reported by you if you are self-employed. It will also show your earnings in each year for the past few years. If the statement does not show all your earnings in work covered by social security, take it to your local social security office. They can help you get your account corrected.
