REPORTS

From WASHINGTON

Washington—There is a growing awareness in Washington of the seriousness of the problems being created by steadily increasing imports of a wide-range of manufactured goods.

For several years, I think many people felt that only the textile industry was being affected by imports. Many of these same people minimized the damages being inflicted upon the textile industry.

It did not take long for the facts to show clearly that industries other than textiles were being seriously damaged. Many plywood mills were forced to close as a result of increasing imports from low-wage countries. We also began feeling the effects of steel imports, automobile imports, and imports in many other industries.

The important problems have created very serious situations in many areas of our economy in North Carolina. The list runs from textiles and electronics to dry cell batteries and commercial fisheries products.

Only last week, for example, I was among a group that called on Secretary of the Interior Udall concerning the squeeze being put on commercial fisheries in Eastern North Carolina as a result of sharp increases in imports of fish meal from South America. In a relatively short period of time fish meal imports have increased to the point that they threaten to fill nearly all of the domestic demand.

Whether it is in textiles or commercial fisheries, there seems to be no one simple answer to all of the import problems. It is very true that we must trade with other nations, but it is also true that we cannot compete with many of the low-wage countries of the world in completely open markets.

The big question we must answer is how to regulate and control the flow of imports without causing serious damage to friendly foreign nations. I feel that we must formulate policies that will enable foreign producers to compete for certain percentages of the domestic demand of the United States. For example, if we establish a policy which says that we are willing to import 25 per cent of our needs for a particular product, this sets a system of rules under which both domestic producers and foreign producers can operate, and at the same time it offers flexibility to allow for future increases in demand which could be shared by both domestic and foreign producers.

In the absence of some such control and regulation, I am afraid that we are going to see many American corporations do the major part of their expanding in foreign countries. I am also afraid that we might also see the destruction of many of our major industries.

Seeking Funds For '61 Fat Stock Show

Rudolph Dale and Robert Bunch, Jr., representing Edenton Jaycees, appeared at the County Commissioners' meeting Monday morning seeking financial assistance for the annual fat stock show and sale scheduled to be held Wednesday, March 29.

Mr. Dale stated that the Jaycees hope the Commissioners, Town Council and the Chamber of Commerce will be asked for appropriations totalling about $500 to cover the expense of the show in order to eliminate the necessity for calling upon the merchants to foot the bill. The Commissioners heretofore have appropriated $100 and were asked for $200, but withheld action until Town Council and the Chamber of Commerce are contacted.

No Comment

"NO COMMENT" is a report of incidents on the national scene, and does not necessarily reflect NAM policy or position.

Washington — The fight to protect the taxpayer's dollar by eliminating "back door" government spending has just begun.

That is the word from advocates of legislation to prohibit any government spending which has not been approved by the regular appropriations committees of the House and the Senate.

Various practices have been developed through the years under which billions of dollars have been spent without any review by the appropriations committees. This is referred to, for obvious reasons, as "back door" spending.

Now, a group of legislators—spearheaded by Representative Smith (D-Va.), chairman of the House Rules Committee, Senator Byrd (D-Va.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Representative Cannon (D-Mo.), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and Representative Pelly (R-Wash.)—are seeking to stop this by-passing practice.

A hearing on their proposal by Representative Pelly was held last week by the recently-packed House Rules Committee. The result was an eight-to-six vote against giving House members an opportunity to vote on the issue.

However, advocates of the legislation have other strategy in mind to obtain a House vote. They believe a majority of House members are ready to vote for the resolution—and 130 already have signed a petition urging House approval.

In the Senate, Senator Byrd, a leading advocate of government economy, has introduced a resolution which not only would bring all spending authorizations under the jurisdiction of the appropriation committees, but also would require action by Congress on the expenditure budget as a whole in the light of latest revenue estimates.

Senators Allott (R-Colo.) and Bennett (R-Utah) are co-sponsors. "Congress," Senator Byrd told the Senate, "has lost control over federal expenditures, and it acts on spending legislation without providing itself with means of knowing whether it is creating a deficit or surplus."

The action of the Rules Committee—bottling up the anti-"back door" spending resolution—was made possible by the very Liberals who had been so vehement in criticizing the Committee—before it was packed—for slowing up the progress of a small amount of highly controversial legislation so that it could receive adequate consideration.

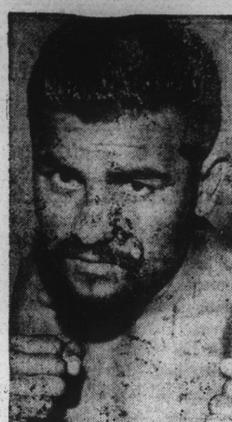

Under intense pressure from President Kennedy and Speaker Rayburn, two Liberal Democrats and a Republican recently were added to the Rules Committee to provide a majority for speeding Kennedy-backed legislation to the House floor after approval by House legislative committees.

The action also was intended to assure that Kennedy-opposed legislation would be bottled up in the Rules Committee—despite the bitter criticism which had been hurled at the Committee for several years past by Liberals whose legislative proposals failed to receive enthusiastic support from Conservative committee members.

In the vote on the "back door" spending resolution, the two Liberal Democrats recently added to the committee joined the six Liberal Democrats already on the committee to provide the eight-to-six majority against permitting a House vote.

Chairman Smith and Representative Colmer of Mississippi, both Conservative Democrats, joined four conservative Republicans in voting to permit a House vote. The remaining member—Representative Reece (R-Tenn.)—was absent because of illness.

One of the methods of "back door" spending is to create obligations by contract. Money then is withdrawn from the Treasury under authority of laws that do not make direct appropriations.

Opponents plan renewed efforts to obtain adoption of a resolution prohibiting the practice.

Pending success in that effort, they plan to wage an all-out attack whenever "back door" spending is proposed in individual measures.

"Back door" spending is provided in the bill by Senator Douglas (D-Ill.), to authorize $390 billion of federal subsidies for depressed areas. Thus, this measure could bring about the first full scale Senate debate on "back door" spending.
