

SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

Washington — The Attorney General has asked Congress for new weapons to combat organized racketeering. The current racketeering laws have brought home the impact of organized crime in all walks of life. At the turn of the 20th century Lincoln Steffens in a series of newspaper articles uncovered the ugliness and corruption which crime brings and a reform wave swept the country. The McClellan hearings have recently shaken public apathy toward crime. On April 7th the Attorney General announced eight proposals to more effectively cope with organized crime, five of which are similar to proposals authored by his predecessor. These bills are legalistic in their language but in brief they seek to curb criminal activity by regulating interstate travel for criminal purposes, regulating the transportation of gambling devices not controlled by the present Johnson Act, and by making changes in the Fugitive Felon Act and the Federal Firearms Acts. Most citizens favor the purpose of this type of legislation, but the major problem confronting Congress and the Justice Department is the drafting of the proposed laws. It is

North Carolina Inquiries Rising

A 20 percent increase in inquiries about North Carolina for the six months of 1961 is announced by Director Hargrove Bowles, Jr., of the Department of Conservation and Development.

The total, Bowles said, was $140,808, up 24,306 over the corresponding period last year. The inquiries were generated by North Carolina's national advertising program which during this six months' period appeared in 40 newspapers and 30 magazines. Returns were bolstered, too, Bowles states, by new radio, TV and travel show schedules inaugurated this year.

Bulk of the inquiries were about North Carolina's "Variety Vacationland" attractions. Travel is North Carolina's third largest industry.

SENATOR JORDAN REPORTS

From WASHINGTON

Washington — After many weeks of hearings and deliberations, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has approved a far-reaching farm bill which would go a long way toward solving many of our basic farm problems.

Those who are acquainted with our farm problems agree that the most urgent problems relate to grains—wheat, corn, and other feed grains. The bill approved by the Senate Committee provides for substantial reductions in the acreages of all these crops, which should materially reduce our burdensome surpluses and thereby reduce costs to the taxpayers.

The bill also provides for the extension of marketing orders to a sizeable number of commodities not now covered, and it extends for three years the authorization of foreign sales of surplus commodities for local currencies.

Although these are the major provisions in the bill, there are many other areas of agriculture which would receive beneficial effects under it.

In many respects, the bill finally approved by the Committee did not coincide with the original requests made by Secretary of Agriculture Freeman. I use the word "original" because many modifications and changes were made at the Secretary's requests after the Committee began consideration of the proposals made by the Administration.

Quite a bit of publicity has been given to proposals which would have established a system of advisory committees which would work out programs without their being approved through the normal Congressional processes.

A great deal of opposition arose to such an approach. I think most of the opposition was based on uncertainty as to what may happen under such a system to such programs as our tobacco, cotton, and peanut programs.

It was agreed that in order to keep intact and operating as T. D. Berryman had the misfortune to cut his arm Thursday of last week. However, he is doing nicely now.

in the past such programs as the tobacco, cotton, and peanut programs, the six basic agricultural commodities would be exempt from the advisory committee approach. This meant that those crops making up about 90 per cent of our farm income would be exempt from advisory committee action. In view of this it was decided that it would be unwise at this time to write into the permanent law any authorization for advisory committees to establish programs in any manner other than the normal legislative process.

All of the members of the committee worked hard through numerous meetings in an effort to get a comprehensive bill approved that would make some constructive contributions toward solving our major farm problems. Now that the committee has completed its work on the bill, two things stand out above all else:

1. The omnibus farm bill is the most far-reaching piece of farm legislation to be approved by a committee of the Congress since World War II. Marketing orders for many crops, wheat, corn and feed grains, Public Law 480 programs, farm credit, cooperatives, and many other areas of agriculture are covered. I know of no other bill which has attempted to cover such a wide range of programs. For many years, the Congress has taken each commodity and each area of agriculture, such as farm credit, and dealt with them individually.

2. The deliberations brought to a head many differences and bitter disagreements that exist among various farm and commodity organizations. If it has not been clear in the past it should be abundantly clear now that farmers themselves must somehow find areas of agreement and common ground to stand on concerning the future of agriculture. Until they do, it will be extremely difficult for the Congress or the Federal government to increase farm income to the level it should be in this day and age.

Kellie Little spent last week-end in Suffolk visiting his children; he went to Richmond with his daughter Saturday, she was

N. C. Tobacco Crop Below Last Year

Based on reports from producers as of July 1, the North Carolina Crop Reporting Service has forecast 1961 production of flue-cured tobacco at 819,600,000 pounds. Such a crop would be 20,270,000 pounds or 2.4 percent smaller than last year's crop of 839,870,000 pounds and short of the 1950-59 ten-year average by 3.4 percent.

High prospective yields — the second highest of record for all belts—with a slightly larger acreage are responsible for the small decrease in production. The total flue-cured acreage is estimated at 462,000 acres (or 4,500 more than was harvested in 1960) and it is the largest since 1956. Prospects as of the first of the month indicate that flue-cured growers will average a yield of 1,774 pounds per acre, or only 62 pounds less than the average for 1960, which was an all-time record.
