

SENATOR JORDAN

REPORTS

From WASHINGTON

Washington — There is pending before the House Committee on Agriculture proposed legislation which is of tremendous importance to all farmers who produce tobacco.

The proposal, which has been approved by the Tobacco Subcommittee of the House, would permit farmers to rent and transfer tobacco allotments within county lines.

The proposal has restrictions in it which would limit to five the number of acres a farmer could lease and the rental agreements could not run for more than one year, but may be renewed.

This proposal should be enacted into law, because it would help solve some very serious problems we are encountering in all tobacco-growing areas.

In past years, such proposals have met with a great deal of opposition, but changing times and conditions have all but eliminated serious opposition to measures which would allow farmers more flexibility in renting tobacco allotments.

Farmers may now rent tobacco allotments, but they must plant such allotments on the farms to which the allotments are assigned.

Most of the opposition to such measures in the past has been based on the danger that many farmers may rent very large acreages and over a period of years the total tobacco acreage would be controlled by a relatively few farmers. This danger has been eliminated in the proposed measure with a provision that no one farmer may rent more than five acres.

In my opinion, the measure would have little or no effect on the larger producers of tobacco. In fact, the only justification for such a proposal is to assist those farmers who have allotments that are too small to plant on an economical basis.

For example, a farmer who does not have enough acreage to keep at least one tobacco barn running cannot possibly operate as an economic unit.

I get a great many letters from farmers who have tobacco allotments of an acre or less. Many of these allotments are small because of estates being divided, and for a number of other reasons. Furthermore, many such allotments are problems for those to whom they are assigned because they are unable to get tenants to come to their farms and plant an acre or less of tobacco.

The proposal which would allow the transfer of rented tobacco allotments from one farm to another within counties is similar to legislation I introduced, and which is now law, which permits the transfer of cotton acreage allotments. The experience we have had with the cotton transfer law has been exceptionally good, and I am sure a similar program for tobacco would be wise and in the best interest of agriculture.

POTASH INCREASES FORAGE STAND, YIELD, AND PROFIT

Potash can increase the forage farmer's stand, yield, and profit per acre, agronomist R. E. Blaser reports, but how much potash should be used?

"That depends on many things," Blaser explains, "the type of soil, the amount of available potassium in it, the forage mixture involved, the time of application, etc."

Experimenting with alfalfa-orchardgrass on Cecil soil, agronomists found this potash influence on stand, yield, and profit:

Stand—Without potash, one plant of alfalfa survived in about every 3 sq. ft. of soil area. With potash, the alfalfa stand increased to more than 3 plants per sq. ft.—from 0.9 plants with 50 lbs. potash to 3.4 plants with 400 lbs. potash per acre.

Yield—Without potash, the mixture yielded only 1.4 tons hay per acre. With potash, yield increased with amounts— from 2.28 tons hay with 50 lbs. potash to 4.01 tons hay with 400 lbs. potash per acre. The best yield—4.07 tons—came from applying 200 lbs. potash per acre in split applications, one-half in March, one-half after second cutting.

Profit—Without potash, there was no profit; in fact, a loss of $9.50 per acre. With potash, profit increased with amounts— $10.80 profit per acre with 50 lbs. potash to $38.17 per acre with 200 lbs. potash to $40.1 profit with 400 lbs. potash per acre. The most profitable practice—securing $49.97 profit per acre—was the same treatment that brought the best yield, 200 lbs. potash in split applications.

Health And Safety Tips

The swimming and boating season is at its peak. Swimming and boating are lot of fun. But these summer pastimes can turn quickly from family fun to stark tragedy.

It is particularly important in the summer to know how to give artificial respiration to the swimmer who sinks. The victim's life may depend on quick and educated action. Few people can survive more than six minutes without oxygen and many would be dead in four minutes.

The two most commonly used methods of artificial respiration are mouth-to-mouth breathing and the back-pressure arm-lift technique, according to an article in the August issue of Today's Health, the magazine of the American Medical Association.

The mouth-to-mouth method: Lay the victim flat on his back and tilt his head backward. Hold his jaw forward. Take a deep breath. Seal your mouth around the victim's mouth. Blow into his lungs. Stop blowing when you see his chest expand. Listen to him exhale while you inhale. Repeat the cycle 20 times a minute.

The back-pressure arm-lift method: Lay victim face down, hands under cheeks. Turn his face to one side so nose and mouth are exposed. Place your hands on the victim's back, thumbs almost touching and fingers spread. The base of your palms should be just below his shoulder blades. Keeping elbows straight, rock slowly forward, exerting gradually increasing pressure. This expels bad air. After pressing downward, grasp victim's arms above the elbows and rock slowly backward. Draw victim's arms upward until you feel tension at his shoulder. This will expand the victim's chest, draw air into his lungs. Repeat 12 times a minute.

Sympathetic

"I can't quite diagnose your case," said the doctor. "I think it must be drink."

"That's OK, doctor. I know just how you feel," said the patient. "I'll come back when you're sober."
