

Youth For Christ

By TERRY JONES

Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. Proverbs 22:6.

"What is this younger generation coming to?" This is often the thought of many parents as they watch their children as they move about in these hard years of youth. Being a young person myself, I do not know what is wrong with our youth. I'm not even sure that anything is wrong with them, because as in any group of people there are some who are living for Christ and some that are not. These few that are not the ones that make the rest appear to be bad. To give you an example of this, I can walk down the corridor of the boys' dormitory on my college campus, and as I walk along I will hear all kinds of foul language. I will hear dirty, filthy words, unlimited cursing and the shouting of God's Holy name in vain. But as I watch I will see that the majority are being quiet, it is the minority of lesser number of the group that is making all the noise. So actually all young people are not bad, it is that few that makes all of them have a bad name.

There seems to be an air of anti-religion among young people, especially college students. Just this week I witnessed what appeared to be a mock prayer of grace at the dinner table in the cafeteria. Another young man dressed himself in a robe and false crown and marched around the boys' dormitory pretending to be Christ, in mockery of Him. Other incidents that I have heard of was a young man that claimed he had God in a bottle. A formal Lord's Supper was carried out at the lunch table in mockery of our Lord and His disciples. A member of the speech class claims that the drinking of alcoholic beverages should be taught to help stop crime. But let us not forget these are just a few young people. It is this type that causes the rest to have to suffer the name of being bad and irresponsible.

What causes these few to be the way they are? I believe one of the main causes is not juvenile delinquency but delinquent parents. Although the church is often accused. But how can the churches do the job of training children when the children themselves are not trained to attend church? Parents are often the cause of their children going astray because they fail to train them in the right way. A young man once told me that he was proud of his parents and the things they had taught him. I wonder how many young people can say that? Parent—you could be leading your child down the road to an everlasting punishment. Ask God's guidance in training your child, and then seek His divine guidance in doing so.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

ageously face the fact that today is here—with us now—and we must face up to it, not look backward on past successes. We, too, must "press on." Paul is saying in verse 14, that this attitude of mind described is the only one that can help a person grow daily toward the perfection he has seen in Christ. We must be ready to admit our own shortcomings, our own failures and imperfections. The alcoholic finds little help from Alcoholic Anonymous until he is willing to take the first steps to sobriety and to acknowledge that he cannot overcome his problem alone. The seeking Christian gains little until he is willing to recognize that here and now he has much growing to do to be like Jesus. Only then does he become susceptible to correction by a loving Father and revelation from an all-wise God. When we are willing to be re-fashioned in mind and heart, then we are ready to press forward to the mark of growing into Christ.

And we do grow into Christian discipleship. We grow as we consciously feel the inner compulsion of Christ bringing the divine must of the spiritual ought into our lives in moments of decision.

Compulsion is a part of every man's life. Life coerces us in one way or another. A social climber accepts the outer compulsion of the social group to which he aspires. The citizen in the totalitarian nation is forced to accept the compulsion from the state. The politician often moves the way the wind blows that promises to sweep him into office. These coercions are from without the person. The great figures of Christian history, down from Paul himself to our great Albert Schweitzer, have been individuals who have withstood the outer coercions of the world because they lived by the inner compulsion of the spirit of Christ in their hearts.

To face the future with Christ is to develop a creative and courageous faith. Faith must be courageous to withstand the onslaught of life in these times. The Christian disciple must press forward that he might be more worthy to be called a follower of Christ. And he must learn that the Christian life is a constant quest. We grow, and we are stronger. Because we are stronger, the attainment of a Christian life proves an adventure—a rewarding one!
