

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

honor. It is warmer and indicates more involvement. It appears nowhere in the commandments of Moses, but it occurs over and over again in the gospel of Jesus. A person whose life enshrines godlike love has no quarrel with godly law.

Godlike love helps us better understand the vast realm of human need and sorrow. We achieve the distinction of being called a neighbor when we do something voluntarily to befriend someone in trouble or distress. It was not the man who fell among thieves who was called the neighbor, but the Samaritan who helped him. Two other men—a priest and a Levite—had had the same opportunity to earn the distinction, but they did not respond with godlike love to relieve the distress of the stranger.

The word "neighbor" had a broad meaning for Jesus. Thus, following his example, we realize that we do not choose those whom we will help. Instead, compassion overflows our hearts and we bless all persons alike.

Godlike love regards ethical demands like the Ten Commandments as a starting point rather than the main goal.

As we look back on the lessons that started with the Ten Commandments, and as we renew our appreciation of Jesus' enlargement of these timeless ethical demands, we can settle at last on some greater goals. If we will climb the steep ascent from where we can look out upon a world more needy than we have ever imagined, we can embrace and seek to implement the greatest commandments ever given to men: "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind . . . And . . . You shall love your neighbor as yourself."
