No Comment

Assistant Vice President, Government Relations Division of the National Association of Manufacturers

NO COMMENT is a report of incidents on the national scale and does not necessarily reflect I.A.M. policy or position.

Washington — Administration leaders are seeking to pressure Congress into voting a huge sum for "pump priming" public works at a time when many members are urging reduced government spending to facilitate a tax cut to encourage economic growth.

The legislation, if enacted, would plunge the government farther into "red ink" spending—which definitely would lessen the enthusiasm of some members for lowering taxes.

Involved in the heated controversy is the question of whether President Kennedy should be given stand-by authority to initiate an additional public works construction program if unemployment rises later.

The immediate objective of Administration leaders is to obtain a House vote on a measure approved by the House Public Works Committee to authorize starting at once a $900 million spending program for areas of high unemployment.

Action by the House Rules Committee is sought to send the measure to the House floor, where a vigorous fight is in prospect.

The Senate already has passed a bill to authorize a $750 million program immediately, with stand-by authority for Mr. Kennedy to spend another $750 million next year if employment conditions worsen.

An attempt is expected to be made during House consideration to include stand-by authority. But stand-by power remains a threat — regardless of what happens then—since a House-Senate conference committee might accept the Senate-approved version of the legislation.

Congress already has refused to approve Mr. Kennedy's request for stand-by authority to spend $2 billion for "pump-priming" public works, the money to be obtained by borrowing from a number of federal agencies, such as the World Bank and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

This method of "back door" spending was vigorously assailed by advocates of government economy and of sound financing.

Trade Bill Changes Sought
Determined efforts are being made in the Senate Finance Committee—and will be made later in the Senate—to modify some of the provisions of the House-passed Foreign Trade Expansion Bill.

The principle target thus far is the proposal to pay much higher unemployment compensation to those thrown out of work by foreign competition than is received by those rendered jobless by other causes.

This double standard is highly objectionable to many.

The Big Earache
A classic example of confusion in the immense, sprawling agencies of the government now is being widely discussed in Washington.

Secretary of Defense McNamara ordered work stopped on construction of a huge ear-shaped radio telescope at Sugar Grove, West Virginia.

But it has developed that the Area Redevelopment Administration, in the Department of Commerce, approved a grant of $1.7 million to develop a tourist center around the telescope—after the decision had been made to abandon construction.
