to his class and he experienced increasing difficulty with each passing year in keeping up with the older, bigger and more capable classmate competition. For attention, he acted as the class clown.

Had his parents delayed his school entrance, the boys' competition would have been less crushing. He could have been a leader. The success might have developed within him a confident, healthy concept of himself.

As it is, he's now entering adulthood feeling inadequate. For the extremely bright and mature, however, delay in starting to school may bring negative results.

This has caused a few school districts with the October 15 cut-off to permit officials to admit children whose birthday falls between this date and December 13 providing they've reached a sufficient degree of mental, physical, emotional and social maturity.

In Nebraska, which has such a law, the Stanford-Binet individual mental test determines the degree of maturity. Other aspects of maturity are judged by a psychologist.

Nebraska established the early entrance procedure in 1950. Over 11,000 children were examined during the first ten years. Seventy-two per cent of them were judged "mature."

A follow-up study made several years later to find out how the early-entrance pupils were doing in the third grade revealed their IQ average to be 12 1/2 (above normal) and their average scholastic achievement a half year above the national normal for third graders.

The conclusion, reached by Robert Stake of the University of Nebraska's department of educational psychology and measurements:

Apparently very intelligent children are likely to be among the top achievers even when they're the youngest in the class.

But what's best for your child will have to be judged on its own merit. You can depend on sound advice from school officials.

SCHOOL AND YOUR CHILD

By John Corey, Appalachian State Teachers College

At What Age Should Children Enter School? North Carolina law requires that Junior be six years old by October 15 before he enters first grade.

The rule is a good one, opines Dr. Joseph E. Bryson of Appalachian State Teachers College, Boone, N. C. Dr. Bryson, an authority on school law, endorses this view of Temple University's Dr. Robert E. Wilson. "Experience has proved that the older children of a grade usually have more success in school, academically as well as socially and emotionally."

The greater Junior's maturity when he begins formal schooling, says Dr. Wilson, the more likely he's to adjust to school and handle first-grade expectations.

The reasoning actually leads some parents to delay their child a year in starting school, even though he's old enough, if they feel the youngster is too babyish, small in size or will have difficulty keeping up with classmates.

This is legally done, states Appalachian's Dr. Bryson, because most school laws require that a pupil begin his formal education not by six but seven years of age.

And in case of boys close to the age deadline, the move may be smart strategy. Psychologists say the male child lags about a year behind the girl in development. Veterans educators even advocate that boys begin first grade a year later because of slower maturation.

At any rate, the youngster held back a year starts his first grade work with the advantage of greater physical and mental maturity on his side. It may make the difference between his being ahead than behind during his book-learning days.

The logic is not easily understood by many mothers and fathers, however, whose child's age falls just a day or so—or even an hour or two—past the deadline and who consider their offspring above average in brightness and maturity.

These parents think their youngsters may be harmed rather than helped by holding him back. And they can be right, too, since many children mature much earlier than others.

Some guardians have felt so strongly about this that they've contested the rule in court.

Others have gotten around it by sending their child to a private first grade. On completing the grade, the pupil enters a public second-grade. And the move has worked out well for some.

For one boy of short height and average ability whom I observed for years, it didn't.

The small boy was "peanut"

COOPERATION Also Pays on the Telephone Party Line

Learning to work well together is desirable. This is especially true on a telephone party line. If you respect your neighbor, he'll respect you in keeping calls brief, fairly spaced, and the line open in case of emergency. Such courtesy and cooperation spreads quickly, with the result that everyone's service improves.

Sunday School Lesson

A MIND TO WORK International Sunday School Lesson for September 16, 1962.

Memory Selection: "So we built the wall . . . for the people had a mind to work." (Nehemiah 4:6).

Lesson Text: Nehemiah 2: 4. The purpose of our study today is to consider the qualities necessary for leadership and how the church can encourage the development of such qualities.

In asking ourselves what kind of leadership does the church need today, and how can we strengthen present leadership; and how can our church develop among us a "mind to work," we would do well to study the qualities exhibited by Nehemiah.

Our Biblical lesson presents Nehemiah, a favorite of the court, as the guiding light in the building of the walls of Jerusalem. Walls around cities in those days were considered a necessity. Therefore, after the rebuilding of the Temple, the walls around the city were of primary importance for the safety of the people.

Nehemiah had come to Jerusalem to get a job done, to rebuild the city walls. This task, of course, was something he could not do by himself. So his first and primary task was to inspire his fellow citizens to undertake it with him. And taking into account the conditions at that time, this task was not an easy one. The undertaking would require the expenditure of time and effort and money, none of which most of the people had to spare. Yet, in spite of all this, Nehemiah succeeded in inspiring in the people a "mind to work."

And since the primary task of any leader is to inspire others with enthusiasm for the project to be undertaken, we may profitably inquire as to the reasons for Nehemiah's success. What qualities of leadership did he possess

LIFE'S LABORATORY

Have you ever thought of your life as a laboratory? There are no test tubes and no scientific textbooks to aid us in our study, but we've been given other aids more important still. We call them God's formulas for living.

ARE WE AFRAID? Then we may test the Christ-given formula, "Be not afraid, only believe."

ARE WE LONELY? Then we reach for the promise of the Lord, "And I will be with you always . . ."

DO WE DOUBT THAT GOD CARES? Then we can analyze for ourselves the message of the Christ, "God so loved the world that He gave His Son . . ."

These are only a few of the formulas for our lives. To test them we must first know them. The Church is ready to teach. We shall need direction also. The Church offers us the help of consecrated pastors and leaders.

Let's go to Church and learn the transforming power of God's formulas in the laboratories of our lives.
