Up-County Firemen And Commissioners Considering Contract

Garland Asbell and Wilbert Hare, co-chiefs of the Center Hill-Cross Roads Fire Department, attended the County Commissioners' meeting on Monday morning relative to a contract between the up-county fire department and Chowan County. The present contract, not yet signed, follows somewhat the contract between the Nash County fire departments and Nash County Commissioners.

Mr. Asbell, spokesman for the fire department, stated that the contract is too lengthy and embodies items which are not pertinent to so small a county as Chowan with only one rural fire department. Mr. Asbell informed the Commissioners that the fire department has adopted a set of by-laws, so that the Commissioners agreed to hold a meeting in the very near future at which time the by-laws will be studied and a contract drawn up which will be satisfactory to both the up-county firemen and the Commissioners.

His wife, Doris is accompanying him on the convention cruise. The Pilot convention group of approximately 450 field representatives and home office officials will spend two days in Nassau before returning to Charleston on Saturday, November 10.

The National Outlook

A Week Of Crisis
By RALPH ROBEY

October 22 through 28 will go down as a week of crisis in the history of the United States. With President Kennedy's declaration of a military naval blockade of Cuba on Monday evening, October 22, we were the closest to World War III that we have ever been. Tension continued to build day by day until the following Sunday when Premier Khrushchev backed down and offered to withdraw the missiles from Cuba. That relieved some of the pressure, but as we go to press it still is an open question as to whether the difficulty really is over. In any event the trouble has had obvious effects upon the business trend. According to the government there has been no evidence of consumer scare buying. But individual reports indicate that there has been at least some such buying. For example, in Washington, D. C., some of the supermarkets sold almost all their canned goods, and probably the same thing happened at various other places in the nation. The aggregate of such purchases, however, may not be sufficient to make an appreciable change in the total of retail trade.

More important, potentially, was whether business management decided it had better increase inventories. There are no statistics on this as yet. The chances are that the crisis did not last long enough to cause business to get beyond the talking stage. In general there is no reason why inventories should be built up as a result of the Cuban trouble. We have no significant shortages at the moment. This does not mean that certain individual items might not become scarce, but it would not be comparable to what we experienced in World War II.

It would not be comparable because at that time we were just coming out of a long depression when millions of persons did not have the money with which to buy what they wanted and then with the prosperity that came with the war, there was rationing pretty well across the board.

It was about the same with the Korean War. But by around 1958, or a little later, this great backlog of both business and consumer demands had been filled.

One further fact needs to be mentioned in connection with the lack of any necessity for scare buying. This is that in all our major industries we have unused capacity. Accordingly, each of these could step up its output substantially with present equipment. Steel provides a perfect example. At present the estimate is that we shall produce this year about 98 million tons. The capacity of that industry is about fifty percent above this figure. It is inconceivable that steel could become in short supply — again excepting special types. Automobiles could be produced in far larger volume than currently is planned. And so it is pretty much from one end of the economy to the other. There was another development announced during the week of great importance. This was that the consumers price level spurted upward. This increase had nothing to do with the Cuban crisis—it could not be the result of that because the price survey upon which this index is based was made before the blockade was declared. The increase was the largest from one month to another since 1958. It lifted the index to 106.1. The base of this measure is the average of 1957-1959.

Beneath the rule of men entirely great, The pen is mightier than the sword. —Bulwer Lytton.
