

Farm Your Woods During Slack Periods

By Charles D. Woodard, Jr.
Service Forester

The work connected with timber growing does not conflict with other jobs, but on the contrary, will fit very nicely into most other types of work. If your slack period is in the summer that is an excellent time to do woods work and if your slack period is in winter that is also an excellent time to work in the woods.

Since well over half the woodland in North Carolina is included in farm boundaries, let's use the farming enterprise as an example and see how the business of forestry fits into the farming operation. This should make an interesting example also because trees are a crop just as other farm crops and respond in many instances, to treatments similar to the same treatments to farm crops. Since it takes several years to mature a crop of timber the production of timber will differ in certain respects to the production of agricultural crops. One big way trees differ as a crop is that they don't have to be mature to have a value, but can be used for something from the time they are three inches in diameter and large enough for fence posts, whereas most agricultural crops must be mature before they can be used.

Farming jobs are chiefly summer jobs, and agricultural crops being grown on a short rotation require almost immediate attention in cultivation and harvest, and the lack of such attention can cause serious loss. On the other hand, timber is grown on a longer rotation and does not require immediate treatments. The practice of forestry blends very nicely into the farming operation because almost all the jobs can be done during the winter months when there is no pressure from other work. Also the work in the woods can be timed so that almost every job will furnish some income or benefit. Cull timber can be removed for fuel wood and things can be made so that they will furnish fence posts, pulpwood, saws logs or other useable products.

Some operators have labor that they would like to keep busy during slack periods so they will have good experienced help during rush seasons. Woods work would be an excellent way to hold this labor and supplement your income at the same time. A well-managed woodland should furnish an average annual income of over $25.00 per acre. Another way in which forestry fits nicely into the farming operation is by providing a monetary reserve for emergencies. Ever so often, because of the weather there will be poor crops or complete failures. When this happens it is awfully nice to have a few acres of woodland from which to pull a few dollars—this is like cash in the bank. No matter what your occupation is if you have woodland it will pay you to have a forester help you in its management. Before selling timber it is very desirable to have it marked. This will give the owner an idea of what he has to sell and also can have a lot to do with the next crop of timber on the land.

The N. C. Division of Forestry is a service agency and has foresters available to help landowners in managing their woodlands and marking timber. Contact your local County Forest Ranger Lewis H. Stallings, for a visit by a forester.

Confusion About '63 Grain Program

In Most Cases Farmers Will Get More Than In 1962

According to the local ASCS office, there has been some confusion about the total amount that can be received under the 1963 Feed Grain Program. Even though the low payment is much lower than it was in 1962, a farmer will get, in most cases, more than he received in 1962 for diverting the same number of acres. The difference this year is that he will get a payment (18c X yield shown on notice) on each acre planted up to his base. Please call the ASCS office for more details.

Farmers are reminded that if they want to participate in the 1963 Feed Grain Program they should visit the county office and file their intentions before March 22, 1963.

Farmers are also reminded that if they intend to apply for 1963 farm storage facility or dryer loans they must participate in the feed grain program by at least the minimum which is 20% of base acreage.
