

No Comment

By JAMES W. DOUHAZ
Assistant Vice President, Government Relations Division of the National Association of Manufacturers

NO COMMENT is a report of incidents on the national scale, and does not necessarily reflect NAM policy or position.

Apprehension is increasing on Capitol Hill over the possibility of mounting government interference in business management.

Many members of Congress became concerned when the President's Consumer Advisory Council ordered an investigation of selective price increases put into effect recently by some manufacturers.

These legislations became even more apprehensive when President Kennedy, during his October 9 news conference, said that "we are watching the price increases with concern and will continue in the days ahead to do so."

A major fear by these members of Congress is that any increase in the political control of industry is certain to retard business efforts to create new jobs and to accelerate expansion of the economy.

The Consumer Council — the members of which were selected by Walter Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers—said that its price study is to "determine whether such increases appear to be justified from the consumer point of view."

There was no mention of whether the economic welfare of the specific companies involved might necessitate the price increases—and that they might represent the difference between survival and bankruptcy.

The Council's Committee on Consumer Credit and Economic Welfare is to conduct the investigation. Its report will "determine whether further attention to this subject appears to be required."

The possibilities are virtually endless. The Council can make any recommendation to the President it wishes—and also can wage a widespread propaganda campaign against any company which decides that price boosts are desirable.

There have been repeated efforts by liberals in recent years to obtain enactment of legislation to require companies to justify proposed price increases at public hearings before government agencies.

The proposals thus far have failed to obtain congressional approval.

A number of measures are now pending in Congress—many of them backed by the Administration—which opponents contend would seriously interfere with the production and marketing of the nation's industrial output.

The measure attracting most attention at the present time is the so-called "Truth-in-Packaging" bill, which is awaiting action by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sponsored by Sen. Hart (D-Mich.), the measure would give federal officials power to regulate the size, shape and volume of packages, as well as labeling and pictorial matter—thus depriving consumers of the right of choice and forcing price increases.

Legislation to increase government regimentation of industry is opposed by many on Capitol Hill on the ground that this would directly conflict with the stated objectives of the Administration's tax reduction bill: to increase private employment and stimulate economic growth.

It is contended that industry can make a greater contribution toward reaching these goals if management decisions can be made by management and not by Washington officialdom.
