

Movement Started To Open New Branch Bank In Edenton Is Opposed

Hearing Scheduled In Wilmington May 18 To Consider Injunction Request

An effort is being made by First National Bank of Eastern North Carolina to establish a branch bank in Edenton. However, the local Peoples Bank & Trust Company opposes the proposal, alleging that the establishment of another bank would do irreparable damage to its business, and therefore sought an injunction to prevent the opening of another bank.

As the result of local objection, Federal Judge Algernon L. Butler has ordered a representative of the U. S. Comptroller of the Currency to appear in Eastern District Court in Wilmington May 18 to help determine whether an injunction should be issued to stop First National Bank of Eastern North Carolina from establishing an Edenton branch.

A representative of First National, which already has eight branches throughout the state, says there is a necessity for another bank in a town the size of Edenton. It is claimed by First National spokesmen that Edentonians have found it necessary to do their banking elsewhere.

First National also said that healthy banking competition is a vital necessity to the growth of any community, just as competition in any business aids a community's growth.

This is the second time Peoples Bank & Trust has opposed another bank in Edenton. The last time was a few years ago when the Bank of Hobbysville attempted to open a branch here.
