

CIVIL DEFENSE JOB IN ALASKA LAUDED

When the most violent earth shocks of this century shook Alaska last Good Friday and tested the mettle of its citizens, Alaskans found in civil defense a new ally in their endless battle with the elements.

Measures taken under a not nearly completed program to help Alaskans survive a nuclear attack were found to be invaluable in surviving a natural calamity. The skeleton State Civil Defense staff of eight became the nucleus of an expanded operations center coordinating the efforts of the armed forces, private organizations such as the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and the YMCA, and the work of local governmental units.

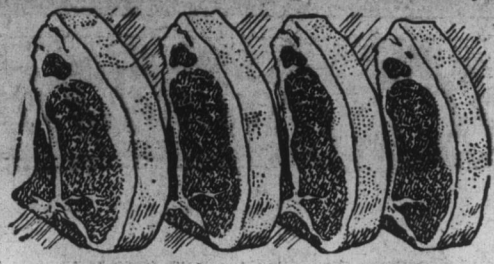

- Among the functions performed by civil defense were:
- Compiling and issuing casualty lists.
 - Disseminating tidal wave warnings.
 - Coordinating private, municipal and military efforts for relief and recovery.
 - Initiation of emergency broadcasts to instruct and inform the people.
 - Distribution of auxiliary electric power equipment, medical supplies, hospital equipment and safe drinking water.

In Alaska, a powerhouse of the Nation's defense, many of the resources readily available to help out were military. Lt. General Raymond J. Reeves, Commander-in-Chief, Alaska, stated that he quickly discovered after the earthquake that it was necessary to funnel all requests for assistance through Civil Defense to assure coordination, lack of duplication of effort, and the most efficient operation.

Looking back to the first frantic days after the quake, Alaska's Governor William A. Egan noted:

"When we were dropped to our knees by the earthquake and tidal waves in Alaska, the Civil Defense organization was there to pick us up and get us started on the road to recovery. 'I can't give enough praise to the Civil Defense organization. Anyone in Alaska who had reservations about Civil Defense in Alaska, I am sure, has changed his mind now after seeing the great job this agency did and is continuing to do for our people.'" their music.

Pictures will be taken throughout the afternoon of the first members of the assembly, the first meeting place of the church, the newly cleared ground that was given to the assembly by a prominent Edentonian, as well as pictures of the whole congregation.

Visitors will be shown the new church property just off Route 32 towards Suffolk, one mile from Edenton's town limit. The land has been recently cleared by James Strickland, who donated his services to the church. The use of the bulldozer he used was by permission of the Higginson and Buchanan Construction Company, which has just completed the Edenton watershed project.

A special of the day will be the cutting of a huge cake to honor the church in its second year.

The people of Edenton are cordially invited to be guests of the Immanuel congregation for the day's events.
