

Senator Sam Ervin Says

WASHINGTON—Congress, only weeks away from the next session, has a backlog of proposals that failed to win approval at the last session. Thus, even before the President submits his suggestions for legislation in the State of the Union Message, there is legislation to be considered.

Suggestions to revamp the Congress, Electoral College reform, and government reorganization are already on the calendar. Controversial labor legislation awaits further Congressional action. Repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and measures to increase minimum wages and revision of federal-state standards for unemployment compensation programs fall in this category.

Crime legislation and a constitutional amendment to permit the states to apportion one legislative house on a non-population basis are already before the Congress before the President's proposal arrives to impose federal standards on jury trials.

Then there are a number of programs that require yearly consideration and that body of legislation will be larger at the next session due to the newly created programs which came into being this year. Overriding these concerns, however, may be problems stemming from the war in Vietnam, the principal one being money. How to find enough revenue to finance a war and a growing array of costly domestic programs could be the key background concern for the next session. If so, the money problem, which had less effect on legislation at the first session of the 89th Congress, could be a more potent factor in the second session.

The Presidential budget seems certain to break the 100 billion mark for the first time in history, and deficit spending, acclaimed in some quarters, may put new strains on the dollar. This is a problem that cannot be ignored. Fighting a costly war, maintaining a growing volume of federal programs with rising costs, and balancing all of the policies that keep the economy going becomes a greater task each year. Spending burdens must be funded some time, and the problem becomes clearer when foreigners doubt the validity of our policies and draw heavily on our gold reserves.

Thus housekeeping chores may get more attention in the second session. The tone of the session and the legislative program could depend on the budget, the proposed deficit and the obligation in Vietnam, and how the administration plans to coordinate its programs which now involve both guns and butter.

If war and money become concerns of Congress, there could be a turn toward refinement of existing legislation and setting a new tone in governmental objectives, a task which has been neglected in the rush of putting new laws on the statute books.

Honest Lad

Tommy, aged 6, was having dinner with his uncle and aunt and had refused a second piece of strawberry shortcake.

"You seem to be suffering from loss of appetite," said his aunt.

"It's not loss of appetite," he replied. "What I'm suffering from is politeness."
