Lt. Gov. Scott Supports Freedom Of Choice

RALEIGH—Lt. Gov. Bob Scott said he is "personally committed to the freedom of choice concept" for school attendance in North Carolina.

"I have said this consistently, and I believe it has worked well in North Carolina," Scott said. "I believe it is working well now. I think this is the approach that should be retained in our state."

"However, HEW has seen fit to say it's unacceptable, and they're using the hammer to federally appropriated funds for local school boards to bring pressure to bear on the boards," Scott said. "You'll notice that the relationship is directly from the HEW office in Washington to the local school boards, bypassing the State Superintendent of Public Instruction and the State Board of Education. That's why you don't ever see these officials entering into the discussions and why it's always the local school boards and their attorneys who are going to Washington to try to iron out the situation."

Scott said he disagrees with the state being bypassed.

"The federal government made the decision to bypass state government," Scott said. "The state had nothing to do with it."

Scott said that since the decision was made at the federal level, "the place to bring real pressure to bear is in the Congress of the United States." Scott said members of Congress are the ones who enacted the Civil Rights Act, "they are the ones who appropriate funds to the HEW agency, and that's where you can bring pressure to bear."

"My opponent, Jim Gardner, is the only congressman from North Carolina who is a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor," Scott said. "He is further a member of the special subcommittee on education."

Now, if he really wanted to do something about this or bring pressure to bear, he's got a wonderful opportunity to do that as a member of this committee. It would fall under his jurisdiction," Scott said.

"But he's mighty busy down here in North Carolina campaigning for governor, and he's missed a whale of a lot of House votes on matters that are of interest to us in our state," Scott said. "And he has missed a wonderful opportunity to express the views of our citizens at the proper level and to bring pressure to bear on HEW as a congressman and as a member of the committee that deals with these matters."

Asked whether Gardner had taken any action in the subcommittee to reflect the views of North Carolina citizens, Scott said, "Well, I'm certain that if he had he would have let us know about it before the television cameras. But, he has not done so, and I assume he has not taken such steps. I doubt if he has. He simply hasn't been up there in Washington enough to get those things done," Scott said.

Technicians Needed To work In The Field

By NANCY DUCKETT

RALEIGH—One of the demands brought about by the rapid expansion of the off-farm phase of agriculture is for more technicians to work in the field of ornamental horticulture.

In an attempt to help provide these technicians, four schools in the community college system are offering two-year programs in ornamental horticulture technology which should prepare students for employment in supervision of nurseries, greenhouse operations and garden shops as well as supervision of maintenance of golf courses. In addition to private concerns employment may be found with state and federal government agencies.

The schools that will be offering this program in the fall are Catawba Valley Technical Institute, Hickory; Forsyth Technical Institute, Winston-Salem; Le. noir County Community College, Kinston and Sandhills Community College, Southern Pines.

The work of an ornamental horticulture technician is rewarding and should attract both young men and women as long as they don't mind hard work and getting their hands dirty. Since more people are "living" outdoors and consequently are becoming more interested in their surroundings, the demand for persons trained in horticulture is on the rise.

When guests come in for a patio dinner, the beauty of the surroundings become just as important to the hostess as her culinary delights.

As W. C. Warlick, ornamental horticulture technology instructor at Forsyth Technical Institute, explained, "Every homeowner has become an amateur horticulturist." And he added, "This is a great hobby, particularly for the man who is not an athlete."

It is not only our residential districts that are having their faces lifted, but nearly every area of town has caught the enthusiasm for sudden beauty. Warlick said, "Just about everything is being landscaped these days. Look around at your service stations and industries."

"There is definitely a demand for the trained two-year student in ornamental horticulture," said Warlick. Students who enter this program can look forward to pleasing work and good compensation, realizing that the starting salaries aren't as impressive as in other fields. However, the sky is the limit as far as advancement is concerned.

Ornamental horticulture technology is not only an excellent field for men, but it has many attractions for women, too. Warlick said that women make excellent saleswomen in garden centers and adapt easily to work in the nursery business.

Boy Scout News

Boy Scout Troop 156 held its regular meeting Monday, August 12. Michael Hall, senior patrol leader, called the meeting to order. After the opening procedure was completed, Thomas Jackson was called up to discuss the previous week's business and to ask questions on it. The troop then elected new patrol leaders.

After this, the meeting was adjourned and the troop went outside to view the project for this week—cleanup.

Michael Hall called order afterwards and the bulk of the Scouts left.

Mr. Woolard, Scoutmaster, then called a green bar meeting, where more needy business was discussed.

Service to the community

A colleague of ours tells this one. On Saturdays he sells dimes (10c each). Seems the neighborhood movie is next door. The kids stop in before the show for dimes—for the vending machines in the theatre. A lot of our business is like this—service to the community. Glad to do it. Because we're conveniently located and open long hours, we're a handy place to pick up change or a bottle of aspirin. But a pharmacist's true service to his community is to be a quick, reliable source of the drugs and medications your physician prescribes. That's the real reason we're here. And we are always pleased to serve you.
