Get me some Biz and get me some Axion
While I sit down with a good cup of Maxim;
Let me start my morning with a swig of Scope
And keep my skin soft with Palmolive Soap.

Then keep my day from a "Total" loss,
And my complexion clear with Irish Moss;
If then I find that money comes hard
I can always use that Credit Card.

To keep your talk quite controversial
Be sure to watch each TV commercial.

The above I call (Soap Opera).

(Thank you very much, Mrs. Farless).

A Few Hints

Girls, if you're always losing your bobby pins or even safety pins in your handbag, let me tell you an easy way to keep them collected. Simply find an old key case and hook your pins inside.

Use an old tooth brush to clean along the backbone when cleaning fish.

Male Dove Of Peace

"Jack and I have parted forever."

"Good gracious! What does that mean?"

"A five-pound box of candy in about an hour."

Anyone is entitled to an opinion, but no one has a right to be wrong in relation to the facts.

—Bernard Baruch.

As of Tuesday all the pyracantha berries are gone from our neighborhood. A huge flock of cedar wax wings made their annual tour and in short time those beautiful birds got their tummies full and left for redder pastures.

I read in the Women's Medical New Pamphlet an article on reasons for hurting feet and one doctor states that when you purchase new shoes, one way to know if your toes will be pinched is to place your heel in the shoe and allow the remainder of the foot to rest over the shoe. Wherever your foot extends over the shoe, trouble brews.

In another article which I read recently concerning school drop-outs, poverty and juvenile delinquency, the blame for much of these problems is Absent Fathers. Absent or weak fathers help to break up many families and children of such families have difficulty of becoming mature or responsible adults. When either parent, in fact, is absent because of death, divorce or separation, our society should find ways to fill the gap. No child should be allowed to grow up without the companionship of adult men and women.

ATTENTION! Parents and young people, too. By all means, go to the showing of "The Restless Ones" at the Taylor Theater, starting Thursday of this week. I'll guarantee that you will long remember this picture and be very glad you went.

Here is a recipe for spicy Pumpkin Pie, sent to me by Mrs. Lucy Farless. It sounds delicious and as soon as I can eat sweets again I shall make this pie and eat most of it myself.

Melt 2 tablespoons butter, then add 1 1/2 cups of fresh or frozen pumpkin, 1 tsp. ginger, 1 tsp. cinnamon, 1/4 tsp. mace and 1/4 tsp. cloves. Beat 2 eggs until frothy, and add 2 tbsp. flour, 1/2 cup brown sugar, 1/2 cup white sugar, 1/2 tsp. salt, 1 cup canned milk. Combine mixtures gently. Pour into unbaked pie shell and bake at 450 degrees for 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 375 degrees and cook for 45 minutes. Serve with whipped cream.

In any regard, Harrell takes no chances now on scaring boys in the woods. He carries a whistle.

A Thought to Remember

By MARVIN BARHAM

Many of us can sum up these questions by simply stating: "I want happiness for me and my family."

"To study without thinking is waste of time; To think without studying is dangerous."

We don't particularly want this happiness handed to us—we want to feel we have deserved it through our own contributions and personal efforts. An inner-instinct tells us nothing worthwhile is obtained without effort. Common sense tells us that roses will have thorns—and any adequate road bed has a hard-rock base. Four thousand years of recorded history has taught us this fact.

One of our most unfair criticisms of others is: "They have had it handed to them."

Take a good look at our heritage. We cannot ignore our many great legacies—our freedom—our prosperity—our way of life! These were fought for and won by our forefathers. People who removed many thorns and labored on the hard-rock roadbeds. And didn't they implant most of the noble ideals within us?

It is well that we remind ourselves that we, too, will be the forefathers of future generations and we will be handing them something—either good or bad.

'License' Needed By Hornblower

By JOEL ARRINGTON
Outdoor Editor, N. C. Travel and Promotion Division

BAKERSVILLE — A. D. Harrell sat on a rock pile, placed the muzzle of the double-barreled shotgun against his lips and blew a long plaintive wail. It was louder than I expected and echoed through the hollow with ghostly reverberation.

"From the top of one of these ridges," he said, pointing to the Mitchell County terrain surrounding us, "you could hear that for a mile or more."

Harrell owns a dairy farm near here. Some days there is just no time for grouse hunting. Yesterday, for example, in addition to daily milking and feeding chores, he played midwife to a cow and settled the estate of a deceased mule which came out on the short end of an encounter with a truck. But most Saturdays and many weekdays during the season he may be found poking around Mitchell and Yancey county laurel "slicks" and rhododendron "hells" with his pointer bitch and the one or more friends and guests. Today he was helping me host Jan Wongrey, outdoor writer for a South Carolina newspaper. "Several years back," Harrell continued, "I was grouse hunting not too far from here with a friend and somehow we got separated. Hoping he was within hearing distance, I blew my gun barrel, waited a few minutes, and blew it again. Well, it worked, and when we got together again my hunting partner told me about the darndest thing that happened. He said he was sitting on a stump resting when he heard me blow the barrel. Suddenly a boy came running down the mountain by him so fast he didn't see my partner sitting there. He stopped in a ditch down a ways from the stump and covered himself with leaves. Then when I blew the second time, the boy exploded from under the leaves and fled, obviously in panic, on down the mountain out of sight."

Wongrey winked at me and we hunkered down as Harrell went on with the story.

"I was teaching at the local high school at the time," he said, "so I asked around among the students. In a day or two I found the boy and inquired about what had happened."

"I was deer huntin' out of season up there," he told me, "and never had been that far from home by myself before, and I was a little uneasy. I don't know whether I was scared of being caught or of being off by myself. Then about dark I heard this horn blow from way off. First thing jumped in my mind was that it was the end of time and Gabriel was blowin' his horn. I figured the best place for me was with my kin. I threw down my gun and ran down the mountain, but then I decided I'd be safe if I hid. So I covered up with leaves in a little ditch. But in a few minutes I heard Gabriel blow again and figured he'd seen me, so I lit out for the house. Course, when nothing came of it all night, I began to feel easy again."

Wongrey and I found the story humorous but expressed good-natured doubt about its veracity. Now, A. D. Harrell is a man of unquestioned integrity and has never been reported to take liberty with the truth. When pressed, however, he admits that certain license is permitted in these matters when slight embellishment of the facts makes for a better story.

FARMERS TO MEET High-Pressure Operation

Another in a series of organizational meetings of National Farmers Organization will be held Monday night at Chowan Community Building. The meeting begins at 7:30 o'clock and all interested farmers are urged to attend.

Test chambers capable of duplicating pressures found many thousands of feet under the sea are being used to evaluate models of deep-submergence research and rescue vessels. One such chamber uses 750 tons of nickel-containing steel and has walls 16 inches thick.

Every man is best known to himself.
