

STEVE BAXLEY AT WORK IN LAB

Local Student At Governor's School

WINSTON-SALEM—Steve Baxley works with the microscope at the Governor's School of North Carolina.

In addition to his work in science, which stresses the most recent developments in his field, Steve North Broad Street in Edenton, is a senior at the experimental school John A. Holmes High School. He was selected for the 1969 Governor's School in Natural Science.

The theory of the Governor's School is that teaching and learning methods are needed for 20th century ideas both in the understanding of knowledge and of man. The program, under the State Department of Public Instruction, is to develop the methods for intellectually gifted high school students.

About 400 boys and girls participate in the program each summer which is now in its seventh summer.
