

Senator Sam J. Ervin Says . . .

WASHINGTON—Our country, which will soon celebrate the 200th anniversary of its independence, is challenged by many problems at home and abroad.

The principal issue now confronting us is how we can achieve peace and stability at home and abroad in a perilous world. This issue goes far beyond our decisions on how we can honorably extricate ourselves from the commitment we have made in defense of the South Vietnamese people. It runs the whole gamut of preserving peace in a troubled world.

At home, this involves many decisions in respect to legislation before the Congress. We are troubled by inflation and government spending. We are troubled by an economy which creates rising prices and rising unemployment. We are plagued by pollution, by our educational processes, and by a myriad of problems including housing, welfare, transportation and space exploration.

We find that many of our governmental processes are under attack because they do not operate as many think they should. There is much concern about how the military draft chooses inductees. In response to this concern, a presidential commission headed by former Defense Secretary Thomas S. Gates has recommended that we abolish the draft except for emergency situations and institute a voluntary army when the existing draft law expires on June 30, 1971. The President has since indicated that he feels that the draft will have to be extended beyond June 30, 1971, but has endorsed the Gates Commission recommendation that we institute a voluntary army at a later date.

The voluntary army concept is one which the Congress will be considering along with other draft reform proposals in the months ahead. My own feeling is that we should proceed with a transition from the draft to an all-voluntary army concept with the utmost caution, because otherwise we may jeopardize our ability to defend our nation when we most need an effective military force.

The proposed welfare reform bill to provide a guaranteed standard of living for low-income citizens has been the subject of many "second thoughts" after the House passed this measure in mid-April. After several days of hearings, the Senate Finance Committee expressed dissatisfaction with the bill and recessed hearings until the administration reviews and redrafts this measure.

Another major issue before this Congress is that of environmental pollution. As a conservationist who has supported the major laws enacted by Congress on this subject, I am pleased to find that the nation is expressing some of the same concerns which I have voiced for many years about the quality of our environment. Again at this session, I have cosponsored the seven administration bills which seek to implement existing laws dealing with pollution.

Two transportation bills are presently well along in their consideration by the Congress. Last week the Senate passed a measure to establish a new National Railroad Passenger Corporation, and that bill now goes to the House. The Airport and Airways Bill to improve air transportation facilities is presently in a Senate-House conference, with its fate expected to be resolved soon.

Three congressional committees have been holding hearings on health care costs and programs. The Senate Anti-Trust and Monopoly Subcommittee, has been reviewing the high cost of medical care while the Senate Finance Committee has been conducting an intensive investigation into the administration of the medicare and medicaid programs. A House Government Operations Subcommittee has been holding hearings on the administration of the medicare hospital insurance program.

This is the nature of our problems at home and abroad.

conservationist who has supported the major laws enacted by Congress on this subject, I am pleased to find that the nation is expressing some of the same concerns which I have voiced for many years about the quality of our environment. Again at this session, I have cosponsored the seven administration bills which seek to implement existing laws dealing with pollution.

Tribute Is Paid Stalls By Newspaper At School

(Editor's Note: The following tribute to Principal Kenneth Stalls appeared in the May 15th edition of The Chowanian, award winning publication of Chowan High School.)

Throughout a person's life, one encounters many individuals. Of these, only a very few imprint a long-lasting impression of greatness. Mr. Kenneth Stalls is such an individual.

As stated in the 1970 Chowan Chief, "During our 12 years of school life at CHS we have grown under three different principalships. Never has any one man done so much for this school, and gained so much respect from the student body as our principal, Mr. Kenneth Stalls."

For three years now, he has held the position of chief administrator of this school—a job difficult in itself—but when carved out to the Nth degree of perfection, the way that Mr. Stalls so saw necessary, one cannot imagine the responsibility that has been his.

He never faltered in any way. Always, in any and all situations, he acted and spoke as an ideal principal would. Upon coming to this school, he confronted many obstacles—obstacles which he laid upon himself to change.

Aware of the fact that the student body had been without discipline for quite some time, he made it clear to them from the very beginning his feelings concerning the matter—and his intentions.

Immediately the students reacted. They had been introduced to a man who meant what he said. And never once have they been given reason to feel otherwise.

The students now had a leader—a leader who no matter what his decisions, the student body must and will obey. "We don't always agree with him, but what he says goes."

Not only did he reinstate discipline, he also led the way in establishing an honorable name for Chowan High School by securing its accreditation.

Immediately following this, he strived to get Chowan membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

But these are just a beginning of what Mr. Kenneth Stalls has done for Chowan High School.

And now, with his resignation, the school and the community are indebted to him—more than they could ever realize.

But rather than the parents, or even the faculty members, the students will probably miss him most.

Always showing up when the least expected, always at the scene of the crime—he was one step ahead of the students, somehow knowing what they were going to do before they even knew themselves.

But not only did he display leadership qualities, but also qualities of a real human being—including a sense of humor the students truly appreciated.

He always showed an interest in each individual student, offering advice which the student could safely rely upon.

Never could a school be so fortunate as to know a principal like him; never could a student be so fortunate as to know a leader like him; never could a person be so fortunate as to know a man like him—a principal, a leader, a man—great in all aspects.

For all that he has done for us, the Class of '70 pays tribute to him—a tribute he truly deserves.

"And departing, leaves behind, footprints in the sands of time."

KENNETH L. STALLS

Highway Maps Are Available

RALEIGH—North Carolina's highway maps—possibly the most widely distributed piece of literature the state offers the public—have arrived at the Highway Building in Raleigh.

H. Boyce Midgette, locating engineer with the State Highway Commission and the man who supervises the maps production, said that some of the four-color 1970 maps are ready for distribution. The first press run is 400,000.

A smaller supply of black and white maps will also be offered to those who prefer them to the colored maps, he said.

The maps are offered, without charge, to the public and are stocked in such places as welcome centers and other public places. They can be obtained directly from Midgette's office in the Highway Building on Wilmington Street.
