

Around The Farms In Chowan County

By R. M. THOMPSON
County Extension Chairman

At this time of year there are always many questions in regards to the use of at-cracking and post-emergence herbicide treatments on peanuts. This year our growers are attempting to reduce both production and labor inputs. Past experience and experiments have shown that a few dollars spent now in buying cracking stage herbicides can save some mighty big chopping bills later on in the season.

It is pretty well accepted now that no single or combination herbicide at any one time can provide season long weed control. The problem is to select the proper combination of preplant incorporated, pre-emergence, cracking stage, and post-emergence herbicides to provide adequate control at the lowest cost. Some on-farm tests conducted in 1968 gives us some clues as to the value of at-cracking stage treatments. Where broadleaf weeds were the major problem, the use of Dyanap at 1 1/2 gal. A, Enide-Dinitro at 1 gal. A. or Dinitro at 1/2 gal. A. improved the broadleaf control performance of balan from 26 to 92 per cent, Vernam from 61 to 98 per cent, Balan-Vernam from 75 to 94 per cent and Planavin from 73 to 94 per cent. Where both grass and weeds were equally important all three of the at-cracking treatments increased both grass and weed control by 10-25 percentage points.

The choice of which at-cracking treatment to use then would depend on the grass and weed problem to be controlled and the relative cost of each material. In many cases, growers use a lower rate of these materials than was used in these tests.

In peanuts where Vernam is used to control nut grass, there is usually still nut grass that comes through the chemical. We are suggesting cultivation with flat sweeps that will cut the root that comes down out of the grass and this cultivation should be at rather high speed. We believe that a cultivation early where nut grass is a problem with high speed flat cultivators will not only control nut grass in peanuts this year but help prevent the infestation from building up.

Wool Pool

The state wool pool has been sold to Wellman, Inc., for the following prices per grade:

Clear wool, $49.46 cwt.
Short and lambs wool, $44.51 cwt.
Light burry wool, $42.04 cwt.

Heavy burry, stained, black and dead wool, $37.10 cwt. Tags, $9.89 cwt.

Handling and re-packing charges will be the same as last year. Wool will be collected on Wednesday, June 17, from 7 A. M. to noon at Sermon's Warehouse, Hackney Avenue, Washington, N. C.

You will note that prices this year are up six cents per pound above last year. In addition the incentive price for the 1970 crop is set at 72 cents per pound. Based on prices to date the incentive payment on this year's crop looks higher than the 1969 payments. Producers should turn in their receipts and file for the incentive payment promptly.

INTRICATE WOVEN STEEL—The Burlington Industries executive office building in Greensboro is an intricate pattern woven with steel. Exposed steel trusses weighing 300 tons each and surrounding the topaz-tinted mirror walls, shown in building model, give the structure the appearance of a glass cube suspended within a steel cradle. Fabricated from steel supplied from U. S. Steel, each of the 75 feet by 170 feet steel trusses was completely assembled in the Colfax plant of the Carolina Steel Corporation before shipment to the site for erection. The Charlotte firm of A. G. Odell, Jr., & Associates, designed the unusual building in which the floors are suspended from a steel roof frame.
