GETS JAYCEE HONOR—Wayne Sawyer has been named Jaycee of the Month by Edenton Jaycees. The honor was announced Thursday by Robert P. Dail, club president. "Sawyer has served the club well by working hard on several successful projects and shows a keen interest in Jaycee work in our community," Dail said.

IN HOSPITAL—Irvin C. Long is a patient at Albemarle Hospital in Elizabeth City.

Men in Family Take Pride In Photos

Father's Day could be the time to honor all the men in the family—with gift certificates for color or portrait photographs to capture three generations—Grandfather, Father and Son.

Such gift certificates offer interesting opportunities to pay special tribute. Each of the men will probably want prints of the others' portraits, while the whole family will delight in viewing all three portraits in a stand-up triptych frame.

If gifts are to honor more than one Grandad and Son, a wide selection of frames is available. A large framed print of the family patriarch's portrait makes a distinctive gift and an elegant addition to the living room or formal dining room.

Plans for this special Father's Day surprise should be made well in advance. Consult local professional photographers about gift certificates and appointments for portrait sittings.

Most of you deeper-thinking anglers have pondered the question: "Do fish become lure wary?" Meaning: Do fish learn to shun certain lures after they have been caught on said lures?

The very fact that certain basic and generic artificial lures have caught fish for generations is sufficient proof that fish do not learn to shun lures.

Fish are similar to humans. Some are smarter than others, either by heredity or experience. And some are so dumb they are incapable of learning beyond a certain level required to exist.

But the fact that a portion of them is smart enough to reject certain lures is something no serious fisherman should ignore.

Memory is a necessary point to establish. Fish must have the ability to remember because otherwise they would be incapable of knowing which lures to reject.

In hatcheries and ponds caught bass and bluegills were tagged and released. Virtually no tagged fish were taken the same day they were released. Some tagged fish were caught the following day. This indicates a memory but a short one, in two popular game species in a semi-captive environment.

In numerous laboratory tests, fish have been trained to react under carefully controlled conditions in an aquarium. They were fed by dropping food through a green tube. Food was dropped through a red tube, also. But a shock was administered when they approached the red tube.

The fish came freely to the green tube but shunned the red—proof of memory capability in trained captive fish. In a recent article, the Sport Fishing Institute tells of a paper delivered by a Dr. J.

J. Beukema of Holland at the Fourth Coarse Fish Conference at Liverpool University. In his paper, Dr. Beukema reveals some very indicative results of experiments by anglers fishing for tagged carp in test ponds. The records showed:

(a) Catches per unit of angling decreased to low levels when captured carp were returned to keep the number of available fish constant.

(b) Relatively high proportions of these carp were caught only once.
