

FOUR LITTLE KITTENS

By MARY LIZZIE LANE

I looked out this morning, what do you think I saw?
Four little darling kittens standing at my door.
They'd not been bruised or battered,
Neither had their little family been scattered.

They looked at me and said mew, mew,
As though the bright eyed kittens really knew.
I hustled around, their breakfast to prepare,
Hoping they would not scatter all would stay right there.

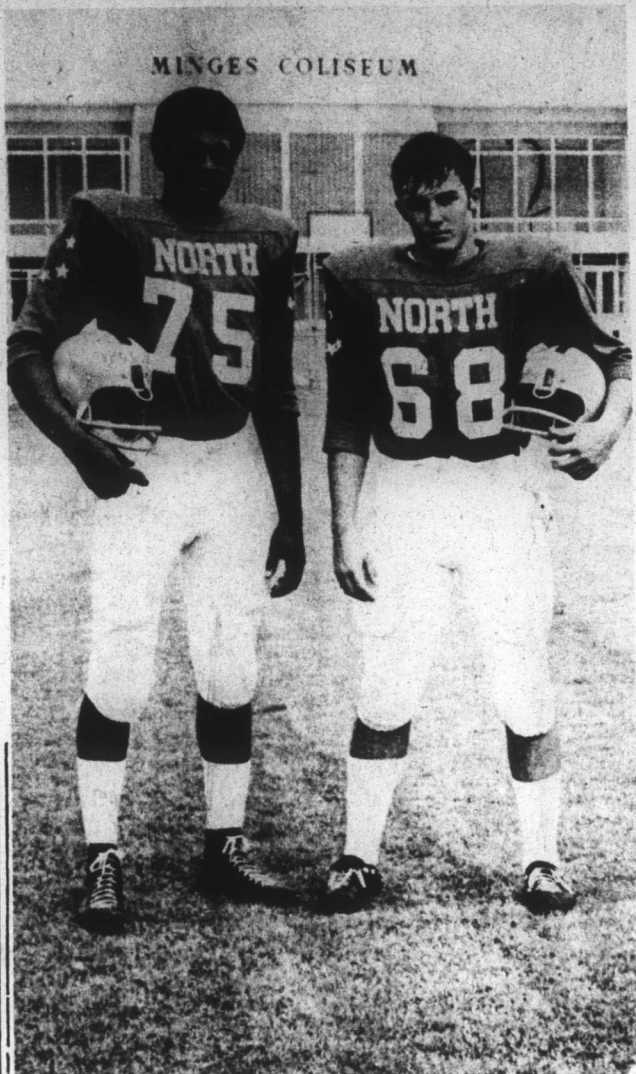

I got there with their breakfast, they all looked at me,
They were right there under the shade of the pecan tree.
I wanted a name for each of them, you know,
As I watched them eating right there in a row.

One kitten got excited and ran toward the ditch,
I decided I'd call him Fatty Witch.
Then one little kitten made for the house,
His name will be remembered as Minnie Mouse.

Then I had two more I ought to name,
They were eating their breakfast, they weren't to blame.
I hope they'll be smart as they can be,
And catch the mice that worry me.

When I go out in the cool of the day,
I sit in the swing to watch my kittens play.
When they really start they run fast,
I don't think my flower beds are going to last.

When they climb up on my flowers, you see,
I yell at them, they're naughty as can be.
They're just as fat as a butter ball,
And have really learned my voice when I call.
