

Caution Urged In Home Study Courses

(Editor's Note: The following article is by Mrs. Lane Kinion, who is in charge of educational and vocational guidance at John A. Holmes High School.)

Parents and students should be cautious of representatives and salesmen visiting the home for educational and vocational training opportunities. Often salesmen put pressure on individuals to sign contracts and pay a certain amount of money immediately regardless of when the person plans to participate in a program.

Frequent calls are being made to the guidance department by people who have signed contracts and have paid for part of the home study or for future training at an institution but desire to be released from their contract obligations. Once a person signs a contract, he is usually obligated to carry through the payments.

Many trade school representatives visit parents and students at night. Frequently they demand some payment on the first visit. Often students change their future career plans and by the time they graduate they are no longer interested in the program in which they have made part payment. In most cases, one does not have to make payment to private bona fide trade schools until he enters the institution; therefore, parents and students should be cautious before signing any contract.

Each year the N. C. Department of Public Instruction sends information to the superintendents of public schools concerning the pressure-type sales of educational and vocational training courses so that the community may be informed.

The N. C. Department of Public Instruction has a list of approved schools and training centers in North Carolina; however, in the case of out-of-state institutions, the state does not have the means to determine in many cases the activities of the institution. An individual can write the Department of Education of the state in which the institution is located for out-of-state information on programs.

Some suggestions to the public may be helpful: When a representative explains his product, do not sign a contract on the date of the interview. Inform the representative that you would like to study his program and will contact him later, if interested. Beware of salesmen who demand payment in the first interview. Check with the public schools or the State Department of Public Instruction before signing a contract. Study the program to be sure that you definitely desire the training. Decide if the training is a temporary interest or a long-range interest in which you will carry through. Many courses include home study. In most cases only a small percentage of people will carry through independent study. Usually only two or three lessons of home study are carried through by the individual and then he loses interest and money. Many people write companies and request that a representative visit the home. Even though a person requests this service, he should still use caution prior to signing any contracts.

Sunday School

Continued from Page 6 to mankind involves diligent and regular study. It involves research into background, and a "getting to know" the characters therein—their strengths and their weaknesses, their faults and their virtues. The time for this endeavor must be willingly set aside; the place for it must be quiet and conducive to thought. And a comprehensive Concordance is essential. Thus equipped, a whole new world is opened up to the student—colorful, exciting, inspiring, maturing, challenging.

Can you, as a professed Christian, afford to delay? (These comments are based on outlines of the International Sunday School Lessons, copyrighted by the International Council of Religious Education, and used by permission).

In the last 30 years, the uterine cancer death rate has been cut by 60 percent, thanks mainly to the Pap test for early detection and to improved treatment. Similar results can be achieved for other forms of cancer. Give to your American Cancer Society.
