Mrs. Chandler Authors Article On Baby Pictures

Jean Chandler of Chandler's Studio has just been honored by having an article printed in "The Rangefinder" on promoting photography of babies and children. This magazine is a national publication for career and professional photographers. This is her third article written on photography that has been published.

Most studios have long ago given up their baby photography because they could not cope with the promotional efforts and the volume prices being offered by the large chain studios operating from department, dime and drug stores, also baby photography is hard work and very demanding on a person's patience.

Jean has a special love of babies and children and the Chandlers decided several years ago to pursue this phase of studio photography, even in the face of the volume competition. In the article she shares ideas with other small town photography businesses on how to make sure you do something better than, and different from, the 99-cent pinup pictures. She explains how a photographer can promote his services and product to keep the mothers bringing the babies to a local studio. "If you have the ability to originate, and the skill to produce portraits that parents will treasure as works of art, you'll have all the babies and small children to photograph that you can handle."

Nowadays people turn to discount houses and volume buying for their everyday needs. This is true in photography—the month-by-month record pictures of baby's growth and progress can be captured in the dime store pictures for less than a parent can purchase camera and film to make snapshots. But for a permanent record of the special ages and occasions (such as baby sitting alone, first tooth, first step, christening, birthdays) wise parents will go to a local studio for the best in service, quality and guarantee, she states.

Billy Wallace Is Voted Honor

ARLINGTON, Va. — Rain, mud nor his opponents could keep Billy Wallace, senior fullback of East Carolina from having a great game. His outstanding play against North Carolina State earned for him the Southern Conference Offensive Player of the Week Award.

Wallace, who was outweighed, ran over and outdistanced his opponents time and time again as he led his Pirates to a 31-15 upset victory.

The 21-year-old 190-pound physical education major carried the ball 20 times for 117 yards, averaging six yards per carry.

On a 57-yard run in the third quarter he scored the touchdown that put his team out in front as State was starting to close the gap.

In addition to his ball carrying the native of Edenton was the outstanding blocker for the Pirates. Throughout the entire game he carried the brunt of the attack for East Carolina.

Coach "Sonny" Randle said "Wallace's outstanding performance against State is indicative of his great potential."

Mr. and Mrs. James Boswell have returned after a trip to Las Vegas, Nev.
