Dean Of Students Services At COA Urges Late Applicants To Enroll

The Dean of Students Services at College of the Albemarle, John Simmons, has reported that there is still space for late applicants for the coming fall quarter.

Dean Simmons and Charles Francis, the new director of admissions, particularly encourage recent high school graduates of the seven-county Albemarle Area who have not made plans for the fall to consider entering a college transfer, technical or vocational program. Although these and other aspects of is on September 5, the admissions office will welcome late applicants until September 15, which is the last day for late registration.

With the new campus opening on U. S. 17 North for technical and vocational programs and continued "open door" admissions with low cost tuition and free daily bus transportation from Chowan, Gates and Dare counties, prospective students are encouraged to contact the college for additional information about these and other aspects of COA.
