Mrs. Taylor To Receive National Service Award

Mrs. Minnie B. Taylor of Hertford will receive a distinguished service award at the National Association of Extension Home Economists annual meeting in Denver, Colo., October 10-13.

On the extension staff in Perquimans County for 22 years, Mrs. Taylor will be cited for her "ability to motivate and organize people for action, regardless of race, color or the job to be done." Mrs. Taylor's leadership is exemplified in the direction and concern she has given to the county's aging and nutrition programs.

Mrs. Taylor was the only county extension agent in the state selected to serve as a regional chairman for the White House Conference on Aging in 1971. She was also invited to attend the National White House Conference on Aging in Washington, D. C.

More than 375 persons attended the "Region R" meeting and an additional 550 persons were reached in five community forums.

Locally, Mrs. Taylor organized an active "telephone reassurance" program and did a radio series called "Tips For the Senior Citizen."

In the field of nutrition, Mrs. Taylor has worked closely with Perquimans County schools in a better breakfast and a drink milk campaign. She has held nutrition workshops for low income families, held a series of nutrition classes for employees of nursing homes and boarding schools and conducted a weight control program for 85 overweight women.

"Mrs. Taylor has an unusual ability to involve, not only her extension groups, but other related agencies and organizations as she plans and carries out her programs," according to Dr. Eloise Cofer, assistant director of the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service.

The Perquimans agent is active in numerous professional societies including the N. C. and American Home Economics Associations; National Council on Family Relations; Adult Education Association, U.S.A.; N. C. Family Life Council; N. C. Consumer Council; N. Nurses In Limelight During Special Program

Mrs. Ocoela Jurasah, president of District 19 Nurses' Association, has announced special events in Chowan County in observance of Nurses Week October 8-14.

Nurses Week has been proclaimed by Gov. Robert Scott to call attention to the vital role nurses play in providing essential health services to the citizens.

Highlights of the week long observance will be invitations to all high school seniors interested in nursing to Chowan Hospital and Chowan County Health Department for tours; invitations to all the nurses of Chowan County to the meeting of the District 19 State Nurses' Association at Chowan Hospital at 8 P. M., October 10, including a program presented by those members attending the recent clinical sessions of the N. C. State Nurses' Association; a special tea for those registered nurses employed at Chowan Hospital and their husbands or guests in the cafeteria of Unit A from 7 to 8 P. M.; and recognition of Chowan County's Nurse of the Year, Mrs. Mollie Hawkins, will be made at the tea.

There are 25 registered nurses in Chowan County working in hospitals, doctors' offices, public health agencies, industries, schools, mental health clinics, nursing schools and a variety of other settings.

In his proclamation Gov. Scott called attention to the role of nurses, both in maintaining health and in caring for the sick. He stated: "The nursing profession is fulfilling an expanding role in providing essential health services increasingly needed by a growing citizenry." Noting the need for recruiting more qualified young men and women in nursing the governor urged encouragement and support for the nursing profession in its efforts to "enhance the quality of nursing education and nursing services." He termed nursing "the caring profession."

The N. C. State Nurses' Association, of which District 19 is a constituent, is currently working with legislative groups and health related organizations to promote opportunities for nurses to make even greater contributions to more adequate delivery of health care in North Carolina. Through NCSNA North Carolina is serving as a "target" state in demonstrating the effectiveness of recommendations from a national commission which has recently studied nursing and nursing education in this country.

In observing Nurses Week Thomas M. Surratt, executive vice president, and Mrs. Barbara Cale, vice president of professional services, would like to express appreciation to all professional nurses, as well as the licensed practical nurses for their supporting role in care of patients at Chowan Hospital.

Computer College Studies Begun

Miss Barnes is now attending Virginia Computer College, a private co-educational school located in Reston, Va.

She recently passed a special aptitude test for the executive secretarial sciences. She is scheduled to graduate from VCC in July.

Her course of study includes data processing, shorthand, typing, administrative assistant, machine courses and other subjects that will adequately prepare her for a position as executive secretary.
