

Gosling Is Given Post With Tar Heel Symphony

C. C. Hope, Jr., president of the N. C. Symphony Society, Inc., and the executive committee of the board of trustees announce the appointment of Maestro John Gosling as the new artistic director-conductor of the Symphony effective October 3. Gosling succeeds Dr. Benjamin Swalin, who was artistic director and conductor for 33 years.

The executive committee has named Dr. Swalin conductor-emeritus of the Symphony and expressed its deep appreciation to him for his "long and dedicated work with the Symphony."

Since 1967 Maestro Gosling has been conductor and music director of the Erie (Pa.) Philharmonic Orchestra, a full professional metropolitan orchestra. The Erie Philharmonic is the only metropolitan orchestra in the state of Pennsylvania and serves as a regional orchestra, performing throughout Northwestern Pennsylvania, Northeastern Ohio and Northwestern New York state.

The Erie Philharmonic, under John Gosling's leadership, established and sponsors one of the most outstanding youth programs in the country, including the Junior Philharmonic, "Lollipop" concerts for tiny tots, the young artists competition, youth concert series, young musicians clinics and a summer music camp.

His sensitivity to the needs of young people and his energy and enthusiasm in working with them caused one reviewer to remark: "He is a joy to watch in working with youth, from tiny tots to teenagers, and his informal approach in getting them involved is indeed amazing."

Gosling also planned a series of "Encounter Sessions" with the youth of the area to develop further their awareness and participation in the art of music.

Gosling also conducts the Erie Philharmonic Chorus of 100 voices, performing major choral works, opera and music from the contemporary literature.

Promotion, New Duties Edenton Navyman Earns

NORFOLK, Va. — Navyman John W. Keeter, son of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Keeter, 806 Cabarrus Street, Edenton, N. C., was promoted to chief storekeeper during ceremonies held at the Headquarters, Manned Spacecraft Recovery Force, Atlantic, Norfolk, Va.

Capt. J. Raymond Poulit, force chief of staff, presented Chief Keeter with a certificate of advancement and a new chief's hat.

When Navy enlisted men are advanced to chief petty officer, they don a new type of uniform much akin to the uniform presently worn by naval officers.

adequate budget and all the necessary supplies on hand are very important to the recovery force which is responsible for contingency recovery support in the Atlantic Ocean.

This support would be involved if an Apollo mission were to be aborted during the first few minutes of launch and have to land in the Atlantic. The command is presently directing its efforts to the final Apollo mission—Apollo 17, now scheduled for launch on December 6, 1972—and the Skylab earth orbital program that begins next year.

The 29-year-old sailor was graduated from John A. Holmes High School in 1961 and enlisted in the Navy on January 17, 1962. He reported to the spacecraft recovery force on March 29, 1971.

Chief Keeter is married to the former Miss Linda V. Burn of London, England. They have two sons and now live in Virginia Beach, Va.

As the command's only storekeeper, Chief Keeter is responsible for all budget record-keeping. All purchases, requests for monies and the cataloging of commercial and government supplies are also handled by the chief.
