These include the use of census and other data, quantitative decision making techniques, consensus building and the potential use of games in community health planning.

The first two days of the conference will be composed of seminars and exercises on needs analysis, benefit-cost analysis and planning processes. On the last day participants will be involved in "Health Game One," a simulation forces at work in the realities of a community health planning council.

The workshop is being conducted by the UNC-CH Training Program for Health Planners, and managed by the UNC-CH School of Public Health's Continuing Education and Field Services. The Office of Comprehensive Health Planning Services, DHEW is providing financial support.

What the world needs, if you ask us, is an open season on eager beavers.

The fastest printer is at the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory in California. It can print all 773,692 words in the Bible in 65 seconds.

Letter To The Editor

To The Editor: Fred Morrison, president of the North Carolina Jaycees, is doing a fine job.

Our Jaycees should be congratulated on the fine job they are doing in the area of prison reform.

Criminals who commit crimes should be punished to the fullest extent of the law; however, we need to try to prepare those who will someday return to society. We all know that juveniles should not be jailed with hardened criminals; for this will only encourage their knowledge of criminal life.

Prison reform is helping many inmates. The trouble is that we do not read about crimes we prevent, and I believe that the prison reform program, as a whole, is helping to reduce crime.
