Walter Jones Reports

By Congressman WALTER B. JONES

In an effort to cope with the energy crisis, the House passed legislation to provide for Daylight Savings Time to become effective 30 days after the final approval of the legislation and terminating on the last Sunday of April 1975.

This bill is part of the legislative program requested by the President to meet the national energy emergency. Experts in the electric power industry believe the year-round observance of DST will reduce energy consumption. In addition, by increasing the awareness of the American public to the national energy crisis, the legislation could indirectly reduce energy consumption.

Also this week the House passed the Comprehensive Manpower Act of 1973 which would establish a program of financial assistance to state and local prime sponsors, enabling them to provide comprehensive manpower services. The program would provide manpower programs for Indians, migrant and seasonal workers, and would authorize youth programs and provide for the continuation of Job Corps under the Secretary of Labor.

The bill would also authorize the Secretary of Labor to conduct programs of research, training, evaluation, labor market information and a computerized job bank. This is legislation previously vetoed by the President, the prime purpose of which is to train the unemployed and underemployed to improve their standard of living through economic advancement. The original bill offered relief only to the urban areas, but on the House Floor, amendments were approved which do provide for smaller communities to go together in an area project.

Our office continues to be aware of the acute shortages; but never in my experience as a Member of the United States Congress have I seen any more bureaucratic bungling. From day to day the authority of appeal is changed from Washington to Atlanta, with both offices being completely understaffed and a change in the Administrators almost daily. Just last Friday, every phone number of those in the Office of Oil and Gas Allocations were changed overnight. Nevertheless, this office continues to try to assist the farmers, dealers and distributors in every way possible. It is, in my opinion, that recent recommendations of President Nixon can in no way equitably offer any long range solution to the present crisis.

There are several bills being considered by the Congress which offer some assistance in the years ahead, but no one at the moment seems to have an immediate solution.
