WALTER B. JONES
A considerable amount of time was spent by the House this week in considering legislation firmly dealing with the energy crisis. By a vote of 349 to 43, the Energy Supply and Environmental Coordination Act was passed, which was actually the non-controversial portions of the Energy Emergency Act which was vetoed by President Nixon on March 6. In effect, the legislation is designed to save energy by relaxing auto emission standards and allowing electric power plants burning oil or gas to convert to coal. The Clean Air Act emission standards requiring catalytic converters on 1975 automobiles would go into effect, but the imposing of even stricter emission standards would be delayed for two years. Also, the Federal Energy Administration would be required to order oil and gas burning power plants to burn coal if they have the capability. The bill would also permit facilities that convert to coal to burn coal until 1979, provided they adhere to timetable set by the Environmental Protection Agency for complying with EPA clean air standards by that date. The more controversial provisions of the vetoed bill, such as rollbacks in profits, are to be considered in separate legislation, and thus, it is hoped that the President will not see fit to veto this compromise bill. Also, the House passed a $2.2 special billion appropriations measure that combines several agencies funding for energy research and development in a single bill. The funds would normally be provided through six different agencies; the Atomic Energy Commission, the Interior Department, the National Science Foundation, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Federal Energy Office, National Aeronautics and Space Administration and Department Transportation, but the Appropriations Committee took the unusual step of combining them in order to speed up the government's energy research programs and to give Congress an overview of those programs. The bill as passed is $66.1 million more than the Administration requested, and comparable figure for the fiscal year that ends June 30. Major including funds for accelerated three years.

reactor safety research. $10.8 Foundation for solar and geothermal energy research, $54 million for the Environmental Protection Agency to develop controls on pollution associated with energy production and use, and $8.9 million for NASA for energy projects using capabilities developed in the space program. One reason for the combination of funds was an effort-by the Congress to speed up vital funding bills before we. become bogged down in possible presidential impeachment proceedings.

Also passed by the House during the week was the Broadcast License Renewal legislation which amends the Communications Act of 1934 to provide that license for the operation of broadcasting stations may be issued and renewed for terms of four years, rather than the current three-year term. However, Congressman Broyhill of North Carolina was successful in amending this language to read for a five year term, which I fully supported. This applies to both radio and TV stations, and provides the broadcasters with a reasonable assurance that their licenses will be renewed by the Federal Communications Commission on a showing that they have properly served the needs of their communities. nearly 70 per cent above the Also, the five-year term will tend to relieve the paper-work burden which is placed on items include $1.5 billion for the especially small stations of Atomic Energy Commission, having to make renewal every

MOM IS HERE TO STAY!

Thank heaven that in this uncertain age of automation there is still one certainty left no one will ever be able to replace Mom. (Although we have no doubt someone will make the attempt).

THERE JUST IS NO SUBSTITUTE

This is especially true when there is an illness in the family. A Mother's love is still the best "Miracle Drug" of all time. It is the universal cure-all and no regular prescription even comes close.

WE TRY TO HELP

Mom just cannot do it all on her own, although sometimes it seems as if she does. We try our best to help her when a family member is ill by filling her needs promptly, giving her whatever advice we can and providing her with the type of pharmacy service she expects,
