

Job Security Employees Need

Winston-Salem—Rufus Edmisten, Democratic nominee for N. C. Attorney General, said Saturday that "no person can work effectively in an atmosphere of fear and repression."

Edmisten told delegates to the State Employees Association convention here that he "support programs which will insure job protection for government workers."

He said, "People who are devoted to good government should not have to fear dismissal because of a change in administration." He said employment should be based on "proved performance and obvious efficiency."

Referring to the Department of Justice, Edmisten said, "I will inherit an office which is a prime example of excellence in production and stewardship of tax dollars."

He cited a Governor's Efficiency Study Commission Report which said the Justice

Department under former At. Gen. Robert Morgan was "one of the most efficient and responsible arms of state government."

Edmisten urged the association's membership to "tell people that the quality of state government personnel is not as our Republican opponents would have the public believe."

He said "state employees' salaries are not competitive with privated enterprises and fringe benefits are not equal to those provided for your counterparts in business and industry."

Farmers Warned Of Harmful Seed

RALEIGH—N. C. Commissioner of Agriculture James A. Graham warned farmers and grain handlers to be on the lookout for crotalaria seeds mixed with feed grains.

"Crotalaria seeds can become mixed with grains due to present harvesting methods. They are poisonous to poultry and livestock," Graham said.

According to Pete Lane, grain marketing specialist of the N. C. Department of Agriculture, the yellow blossomed plant is readily visible in soybean fields and is abundant in Eastern North Carolina this year.

Lane explained that the only way to prevent the crotalaria seeds from mixing with grains is to mow the plants down when at the end of the row and pull up and destroy them if the crop itself is infested.

"Crotalaria seeds lie dormant for years and then germinate. Once they produce seeds the problem of control remains for years," he said. "I would urge eastern North Carolina farmers to begin control programs now as few markets exist for crotalaria infested grain and then only with heavy discount penalties for cleaning."

The poisonous plant was once considered valuable for soil conservation but it has been discontinued.

Welcome Back

This week we take special pleasure in welcoming the arrival of the Fall season. Thank goodness, it's here!

Not only is it one of the loveliest times of the year, but after a summer of heat and humidity, it ranks as one of the most comfortable. Warm days and cool evenings make living easy.

Of course, all good things do end. Humans, being natural complainers, will soon be deriding the cold, bitter days which are bound to follow. So, let's enjoy the Goodies while they last!
