same time I did, came over and we enjoyed visiting. Mrs. Baker and Berry are the only two people still in the area out of about 30 people I worked with during the war.

The trip from Philadelphia to New York went smoothly. Near the big city there were 14 or more traffic lanes. In New York we saw two stage plays and visited Madison Square Garden, New York Stock Exchange, Central Park, Fifth Avenue Shopping Center, St. Francis Cathedral, Grand Central Station, and went on top of the World Trade Center building. This building is 110 stories high. It houses international trade agencies.

From New York we traveled southward. At first we were in corn-soybean country, but this quickly changed to vegetable and fruit type farming.

Most of the vegetable farms were small. Often a farmer would have several vegetables in a single field and about 10 rows in each crop. Crops grown include cantaloupes, pepper, okra, squash, egg plant, cucumber, peaches, sweet corn, apples, blue berries, onions, sweet potatoes.

Through accident we came across a vegetable auction at Vineland, N. J. (Biggest glass manufacturing center in the Nation.) This auction was similar to the one at Valhalla, but larger. Some of the farmers told me that the sales last year amounted to $21,000,000 (Chowan Produce Exchange annual sales amounts to about $100,000.) They sell over a much longer period of time. As I remember, they said some days 400 farmers sell produce at the auction.

Other points of interest: Nearly all produce was packaged in cardboard containers, including cantaloupes. A chance system determined your place in the sale line. You could come last to the market and sell first. Most leads were small. Buyers sit down during sale at special places.

Everywhere we went the people were very friendly, especially in New York City. Everyone we asked were more than willing to stop and give directions. I had a glasses lens to come out in Freehold, N. J. The local optometrist took me in and put it back in place while four patients waited.

It was an enjoyable vacation, but it was good to get back home.

Death Claims

Mr. Lupton, 75

BELHAVEN—J. Harold Lupton, 75, brother of Hector Lupton, 111 W. Gale Street in Edenton, died Saturday. He was a retired merchant.

Surviving besides his brother are his widow: Mrs. Grace C. Lupton; one son: James H. Lupton of Three Rivers, Mich.; three other brothers: John F. Lupton of Swan Quarter, C.L. Lupton of Greenville and L. A. Lupton of Scranton; his step-mother: Mrs. John A. Lupton of Scranton and three grandchildren.

A funeral service was held Monday at 2 P. M. in the St. James Episcopal Church. Burial was in the St. John Episcopal Church Cemetery.
