

Workshop To Benefit Migrant Program

Teachers who work with migrant children in North Carolina will attend one of two workshops designed to help them increase their competence in teaching reading.

One workshop will be held November 17-18 at the Dutch Inn in Benson. Another will be held November 23-24 at the Town and Country Restaurant in Williamston. Each program begins with a 9:30 A. M. session on the first day and concludes by 4 P. M. on the second day.

Sponsored by the N. C. Department of Public Instruction, the workshop will be conducted by department and regional consultants.

The workshops have been planned to help teachers expand their reservoir of methods and techniques for teaching reading to migrant children. Topic will include assessment and evaluation of reading needs, reading disabilities, reading materials, and classroom organization for instruction. Grades K-3 and 4-8 will meet separately.

Approximately 250 teachers, instructional aides, principals, supervisors, and project directors who have responsibilities for providing instructional programs for migrant students are expected to participate in the two workshops.

According to State Migrant Education Director Robert Youngblood, staff development activities like these increase the abilities of teachers to understand and to improve the skills of the most educationally disadvantaged group of people in the country.

Migrant education projects are currently being conducted in 35 school units as part of the regular school term: Alamance, Bertie, Bladen, Camden, Chowan, Columbus, Duplin, Edgecombe, Gates, Greene, Halifax, Harnett, Haywood, Henderson, Hertford, Hoke, Johnston, Lenoir, Maxton, Martin, Montgomery, Nash, Northampton, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Pitt, Red Springs, Richmond, Robeson, Sampson, Scotland, Saint Pauls, Tyrrell, Washington, and Wilson.
