Died in Prison

remains were reinterred at old St. Phillips Church at Brunswick to comply with Smith's often expressed wish to be buried near Orton Plantation, his former home.

As the grave was opened, some expressed doubt that it was the body of Smith, since it was an unmarked site in the woods, but most were fully convinced when the lead bullet from the duel of many years before was found in the ashes. Friends placed a marble slab over the new grave, inscribed "Benjamin Smith, once governor of North Carolina."

Nearly 50 years later, a Civil War shell destroyed the marble slab, but spared the nearby walls of the church.

At about the same time he was governor, Smith served as master of the grand lodge of Masons, and nearly a century after his death, that fraternity added a monument to the grave.

Through the years, various laws were passed pertaining to imprisonment for debt. However, debtors continued to be imprisoned throughout the first half of the 19th century, until 1868 when the new Constitution of North Carolina abolished the practice except for fraud. During these years, bankruptcy procedures were available, but terms were harsh and few filed.

So, the governor who was elected 15 times to the Senate of North Carolina, gave to the then penniless state university the 20,000 acres of Tennessee land he had received for his service in the Revolution, who had urged a penitentiary system for the state and advocated public schooling "within reach of every child," spent his last hours in prison because his creditors found his word to pay was not good enough.

V.A. Questions And Answers

Q— Are veterans with military service after World War II and before the Korean Conflict eligible for home loan benefits?

A— Since Oct. 1, 1976, those whose active duty occurred after July 25, 1947, and prior to June 27, 1950, who served more than 180 days under conditions other than dishonorable or discharged with less service for a service-connected disability, are eligible for home loan benefits.
