

Veeco Proposes New Rate

ROANOKE RAPIDS — Virginia Electric and Power Company has proposed a new residential rate for its North Carolina retail customers which would reduce charges for individuals whose home construction meets certain energy conservation specifications.

If approved by the North Carolina Utilities Commission a customer who uses 1,500 kilowatt-hours a month for example would save $3.87 a month or $46.44 a year.

"This special rate is designed to promote the installation of maximum conservation measures in homes," according to Jerry Causey, Veeco marketing manager-Southern Division. He pointed out that some new, well-constructed homes already meet the standards. Older homes frequently can be brought into compliance with the addition of insulation or storm doors and windows.

To qualify for the rate a structure's ability to limit the loss of heated air to the outside must not exceed a predetermined level. Generally this standard may be met if the following material is in place:

-ceiling insulation of 10 inches of fiberglass batt or insulation with a thermal resistance value (R-rating) of 30.

-exterior wall insulation of three and one-half inches of fiberglass batt or insulation with an R-rating of 11

-floors over unheated spaces with six inches of fiberglass batt or insulation with an R-rating of 19.

-all windows are either double pan or have storm windows.

-all doors either insulated metal or have storm doors. Once the rate is approved, customers may apply by contacting their local Veeco office to arrange for a home inspection to determine if they qualify.
