In spite of the governor's statement that he was "guided in large measure by their (the commission) thorough and expert findings the governor's final package resembles not at all the three alternatives of the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Instead, the governor's team began looking at solutions not for practicality but for compromise. Not for neatness but for successful passage.

"Sure, its a complicated solution, owing basically to compromise--but we had to make it palatable to the people and to the legislature. Even the governor says its a temporary solution, but its the best we can get through the legislature," Pearce says.
