

Bradshaw Addresses Congressional Club; Alleges Propaganda Attack

RALEIGH — State Transportation Sec. Tom Bradshaw struck back with facts last Thursday at the Congressional Club and "other like-minded groups of ultra-conservatives" that are fighting Gov. Jim Hunt's highway funding proposals in the General Assembly.

Bradshaw, who has resigned his position effective July 1, said, "It would be tragic for North Carolina if the forces that are fighting the governor's proposals in the hope of gaining narrow partisan political advantage should prevail."

But the secretary added, "I don't believe they will. I am confident the people will see through the smokescreen being thrown up in an effort to mislead them about our highway needs."

Bradshaw said that "Some of the propaganda activities financed or otherwise supported by the right-wing political club have amounted to personal attacks on me."

The club used "blatant distortion or outright omission of facts," Bradshaw said, "to encourage not just hostility to progress and enlightenment in our state, but also to seek financial contributions..."

Bradshaw cited several instances in which he said TV and radio ads financed by the Congressional Club distorted, misrepresented or did not tell the truth in their attacks upon him and Gov. Hunt's program. He backed up his news conference statements with records and fact sheets dealing with the highway construction projects in question.

"One of the ads says we have built an unneeded road through the property of Transportation Board member Arthur Williamson," Bradshaw said. "This is a reference to the proposed NC 130 project in Columbus County. And it is just not true."

Bradshaw said that no right-of way acquisition or construction has been authorized for the project and "it is now being reevaluated, along with all other projects in our long-range planning document called the Transportation Improvement Program, in the light of our severely limited financial resources."

Bradshaw said the same ad "makes something sinister out of our decision to alter a highway project at Conway in Northampton County to save two old magnolia trees."

Actually, "it may well have cost the public less" to save the magnolias "than it would have cost us to fight a threatened condemnation lawsuit through the courts so we could cut down these trees," Bradshaw said.

The secretary state, "Considering the political viewpoint of those who run the Congressional Club, one wonders what the club's reaction would have been if we had cut down the old magnolia trees? Would they have complained that our bulldozers were out to destroy the few remaining symbols of plantation society in Northeastern North Carolina?"

Bradshaw said that "the advertising blitz directed at me also distorts and misrepresents the facts about plans for a bridge in Camden County." The 65-foot bridge in question will carry US 17 traffic over a canal that serves as an alternate route for the Intracoastal Waterway. Since construction began, dry weather conditions which lowered the water level in the canal forced its closing to navigation for an indefinite period.

Bradshaw said the Transportation Department sought federal approval of a

Jesse Helms Guest Speaker

MANTEO — Sen. Jesse Helms, North Carolina's senior senator, will be the guest speaker at opening night, June 12, of the 41st season of "The Lost Colony". The drama runs nightly, except Sundays, through August 29.

Special tribute will be paid to playwright Paul Green who died May 4. Green, called "the father of outdoor drama" started a new form of entertainment when he introduced the symphonic drama in 1937.

Helms will present the Roanoke Island Historical Association's Distinguished Service Award to a person to be named in the ceremonies prior to the opening of the drama.

Emmy and Tony awards winner Joe Layton will again direct the show with a team of professional design and production people with extensive Broadway and cinematic credits. Layton currently is in New York where he is producer of the movie version of "Annie."

Over 2-million people have seen "The Lost Colony" since its initial performance in 1937. This year's opening performance will be the 2,185th regular performance. Last year, 90,381 people saw the drama.

Ticket prices for "The Lost Colony" are $5.25 and $5.75 for adults, $2.50 for children under twelve. For information write "The Lost Colony," P. O. Box 40, Manteo, N. C. 27954 or call 919-473-3414 (after June 8).

35-foot span over the canal in January, 1979, before construction got underway. He said that "strong support for a 65-foot bridge" from a number of organizations in the area, including the U. S. Corps of Engineers, prompted withdrawal of the request for a 35-foot bridge.

"It should be noted that all fixed-span bridges over the Intracoastal Waterway provide 65-foot vertical clearance," Bradshaw said.

Informal indications that the canal might be discontinued as an alternate route for the waterway didn't come until the fall of 1980, after $2.5-million in construction contracts had been authorized, Bradshaw said.

"Little if any money could have been saved by redesigning the project and starting all over," Bradshaw said, but "the advertising blitz against the governor's good roads package makes no mention of the other side of the coin."

Bradshaw said that opponents of the governor's program also are continuing to disseminate a false report that proper auditing of his department's books "has not been possible since 1973."

State Auditor Ed Renfro, in a letter to the chairmen of the legislature's select committee that made a study of the department's operations, said the statement about the audits is incorrect. "I am at a loss as to why the statement was made," Renfro said in the letter.

Bradshaw also said that one of the legislative chairmen, Rep. Allen Barbee of Nash County, responded on April 30 to the auditor's letter.

"This week, however, the discredited suggestion about the audits was included in a thick package of propaganda Tar Heels received in the mails," Bradshaw said.

A full-page ad that ran in newspapers across the state last week said the state would have $114.4-million more for highways if it would "Postpone requested funds for new road construction," the secretary said.

Bradshaw added, "But you can't build roads or budgets... What they have done in this instance, of course, is create an illusion, not cope with our problems, in a calculated effort to mislead."

Responding to a question, Bradshaw said he was confident Governor Hunt's package will be approved. But he expressed concern that the Congressional Club's "political machine may succeed in its cynical effort to mislead and confuse people, creating unnecessary and self-destructive tensions and misunderstandings among our citizens."

Kid Stuff: Mother's Milk Is Still The Best

(Editor's Note: This is another in a series of articles about children submitted by the Human Development Division of the Pasquotank-Perquimans - Chowan - Camden District Health Department.)

BREAST MILK - The Best Milk

Most pediatricians feel that both breast feeding and bottle feeding can produce physically and emotionally healthy babies. However, there are many important advantages of breast feeding which today's young couples are realizing and considering. Breast milk is raw and fresh. No nutrients have been destroyed by methods of processing. And assuming that the mother is eating a good diet, it is the perfectly balanced meal for an infant. It also contains necessary disease-fighting antibodies which are passed to the infant. Breast milk is known to be easier to digest than formulas. Babies fed entirely on breast milk seldom get constipated. Stools are soft with little odor. In addition, breast fed babies are much less likely to have serious respiratory problems, digestive problems, skin disorders or other allergic reactions. The baby's sucking exercise from the breast leads to good facial development whereas persons bottle fed from birth tend to have more dental structure problems in adulthood.

It is for many of these reasons that informed young women are now choosing more often to breast feed their babies. In the process, they find that it is a very convenient and inexpensive method, involving no sterilization, mixing, warming or storage. Breast milk is always the perfect temperature and is available at a moment's notice. And as an extra plus for the mother, nursing helps the uterus to contract and return to normal size after delivery. Nursing also burns an extra 500 to 1000 calories a day which helps the woman to return to her normal weight and shape again.

Most women are physically able to nurse their babies, even those who are Rh negative, have had cesarean deliveries, multiple births, or premature deliveries. Actually, breast milk is the ideal food for a small, weak or sick infant. Some mothers have found that their infants are allergic to every formula available and have consequently had to appeal to lactating mothers or breast milk banks to nourish their sickly baby.

This is not to mention the mutual satisfaction gained by the close body contact between mother and child, and the psychological satisfaction gained by both parents in knowing that they are providing their infant with the best possible nourishment available.
