Around The Farms

By J. Michael Williams County Ext. Chairman

There are a couple of events coming up in Raleigh in the near future that many of you may be interested in. The first is the 4th annual Southeastern No-Till System Conference to be held at McKimmon Center at North Carolina State University on November 24. This program will emphasize no-till production of corn, soybeans, and forages from a North Carolina view

Nurse Improves Student Health

According to Mrs. Hare, an additional service in the Board of Education and its administrative staff believe that attaining and maintaining a high level of physical well-being enables the school child to work at his maximum capacity in the classroom and to grow into healthy, happy and productive adults. For the past six years, the importance of student health has been evidenced through the position of a registered nurse, who coordinates supportive health services within the school system. Mrs. Ann Hare has served in this capacity for the past two years.

As a school nurse, Mrs. Hare works closely with the local Health Department, the District Health Department, other health agencies and private physicians in providing health services, health education and a healthful physical environment for school children. One area of concentration for health services is that of teeth.

area of dental health education is now being brought to Edenton-Chowan Schools by Dr. Jasper Lewis, Pedodontist, of Greenville. Dr. Lewis has offered, twice a month, the free services of Ann Griffin, a Dental Health Educator on his staff. Mrs. Griffin will visit K-12 classrooms, on a schedule established by Mrs. Hare with a dental educational program emphasizing preventive dentistry and providing career occupational information in the field of

As a pedodontist, Dr. Lewis specializes in the care of children's, adolescents' and handicapped children's teeth. A strong point in Dr. tistry is that preventing dental problems in children is as equally important as correcting dental problems. Dr. Lewis' belief in his philosophy is evidenced through his loaning his

"Mrs. Griffin's services, in addition to those which have been provided by the District Health Department for years, will enable more students in the Edenton-Chowan system to be better educated about dental care," Ann Hare explained. Pam Pritchard, better known to students in this area as the "Tooth Fairy", continues to coordinate with fifteen school principals in four coutnies, dental health education services to K-6 grade students. If there are requests for services at high grade levels, Pritchard is available. She visits the classrooms twice each year with an educational

Dental Health Educator to techniques for cleaning teeth and general good tooth care. Mrs. Griffin's services will supplement those of the District Health Department and extend on a planned schedule, to junior high and high school students.

Every other year, the District Health Department conducts an intense program of screening Edenton-Chowan's students' teeth and those in three other counties. A fully equipped and staffed mobile dental unit is provided which gives corrective services to eligible students following parental permission. Parents of eligible children are made aware of existing tooth problems and suggestions to refer to private dentist are made.
