N.C. Symphony Educational Concerts To Entertain School Children; Local Choruses Will Also Give Performance

Taking classical music to the school children of the state is one of the symphony's most important functions. This season the N.C. Symphony has extended itself to reach more children than ever through educational concerts held in North Carolina's public schools. Through performances of 41 full symphony, 31 chamber orchestra and 178 chamber ensemble concerts, the orchestra will reach approximately 150,000 children this year.

When the North Carolina Symphony arrives in Edenton February 23 for rehearsal with the Edenton Choral Society and the John A. Holmes High School Concert Choir, 2000 local students in grades three through twelve will be prepared for educational concerts at Swain Elementary School on February 24 and 25. May Rhea Gardner, president of the Chowan County Chapter of the North Carolina Symphony, said that the response of students and teachers to last year's educational concert confirmed the local chapter's determination that more students should benefit from the enriching cultural experience offered by one of the state's finest assets. "The chapter's efforts to raise funds necessary for providing two, instead of one, free educational concerts for students this year could not have been accomplished", she said, "without the business, private community's and the school system's generous response to appeals for contributions, memberships and ticket purchases to the evening performance; it is truly a community sponsored event."

To ready younger students for their musical experience, the local chapter purchased teacher and student preparatory materials uniquely developed by the symphony's educational department.

Repairing Fractured Tooth

If you have a fractured tooth, whether chipped or broken, this not only detracts from your appearance, it also can make the tooth more vulnerable to decay. It should be repaired as soon as possible.

In one repair method, the dentist may use a composite resin in an acid etch process. The chipped or broken tooth will first be cleaned with pumice and a revolving rubber wheel. Then he'll apply a dilute acid to the surface of the tooth so the composite resin will adhere to it. After the correct shade has been selected, he will shape the resin directly onto the fractured area. In a few minutes it will harden, and then the dentist will give the repaired area its final shaping and polish.

Other repair methods may be used, depending on the condition of the tooth, but often composite resin will be selected because it had a superior bonding quality and is relatively inexpensive. It also has a "time" advantage, because the repair can often be completed in one visit.
