

Coach Jack Bunch

Bunch Chosen Teacher Of The Year

Coach Jack Bunch, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Bunch of Edenton, has been chosen 1984-85 Teacher of the Year at Bonds-Wilson/North Charleston High, South Carolina.

Bunch, a native of Edenton, has taught for twenty years in schools located in Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina. He teaches social studies and world history.

A 1963 graduate of the University of North Carolina, Bunch earned his master's degree in 1971. He began coaching in 1965 and has coached football, track, J.V. basketball and Varsity basketball.

Bunch is married to the former Cindy Bragg of Gray, Georgia.

Women-Owned Business Forum

A first-of-its-kind forum for women-owned businesses will be held at Duke University in Durham on May 23. Representatives of more than 100 firms that are potential suppliers of goods and services needed by Duke and the State of North Carolina have been invited to the half-day forum, which is open to any interested women business owners.

The forum is being jointly sponsored by Duke Purchasing and the Office of Women in Economic Development, N.C. Department of Administration.

"The state, through the Office of Women in Economic Development is happy to be a partner with Duke University in this forum for women-owned businesses," said Grace Rohrer, secretary of the Department of Administration. "This is just one way we can inform the small business owners of the opportunities available to them."

Joseph Alston, associate director of Duke's Material Support Department, said the forum will allow potential vendors to meet the purchasing staffs from Duke and the state. Vendors will have an opportunity to learn more about purchasing, accounting and methods of obtaining contracts.

"Both Duke and the state have active programs that seek out potential supply firms operated by minorities and women," Alston said. A similar forum was held at Duke last fall for minority-owned firms.

The workshop will begin at 8:30 a.m. in the Searle Center of the Seelye G. Mudd Building at Duke, and conclude at 12:30 p.m.

For detailed information about the forum, call Inez Fair at Duke, (919) 684-3421, or Celeste Dean at N.C. Department of Administration, (919) 733-7892.
