Flea Market Law Passes

The North Carolina General Assembly has ratified legislation that will require those who sell at flea markets, or who sell from a truck parked along the side of a road to obtain and display a $25 state privilege license and a sales tax number. Failure to do so is punishable as a misdemeanor of up to 30 days, and/or a $200 fine. Further, the operator of a flea market is required (under the same penalty) to maintain a daily list of flea market vendors and their appropriate privilege license and sales tax number. Under this statute, a person selling from a truck must obtain written permission from the property owner.

"The North Carolina Retail Merchants Association believes that this legislation is an equitable solution that will create a level playing field for all sellers in North Carolina, and thereby protect the consumers," said Fran Preston, NCRMA lobbyist.

There are exceptions (tracking the state's sales tax laws): household personal property, farm and craft products produced by the seller and charitable non-profit organizations are exempt. But if the vendor buys for resale, he will need to purchase the $25 annual state privilege license (good anywhere in the state) and obtain a state sales tax number.

This law will go into effect July 1, 1988.

Candidates Will Appear

Former Arizona Governor Bruce Brabbitt brings to three the number of presidential candidates confirmed to appear at the Democratic FunFair in High Point on September 12. Brabbitt confirmed he will attend the Democratic Party event earlier this week.

The Democratic FunFair promises to be the biggest event in the history of the North Carolina Democratic Party, according to State Chairman Jim Van Hecke. "It's obvious that Governor Brabbitt wants to join with thousands of other Democrats in what may be the biggest event in the South before Super Tuesday," Van Hecke said.

Fourteen Southern states, including North Carolina, will hold presidential primaries or
