Legislative Day Attended

The Edenton BPW joined more than 50 fellow members from across North Carolina on Thursday, February 18, 1993 to host "Legislative Day: 1993 and Towards 2000." Legislators were honored at an early breakfast before hurrying back to the morning sessions of the House and Senate. Pete Thompson was among those attending.

Members from Edenton present for Legislative Day were: Nancy Winslow, president, Beth Taylor, Hettie Wallace, and Clara Boswell.

"This day was an opportunity for BPW members to make personal contact with their legislators," said Nancy Webster, President of BPW/NC. "We want to show our support for our legislators and emphasize the commonality of our goals."

Mary Ray Oaken, executive officer for the Lieutenant Governor of Kentucky and Past National President of BPW, spoke on "Women's Issues Toward the New Century." "For too long we have been told that discrimination is good and works in our own best interest," she said. "It is time for performance, not promise; full partnership, full participation; action and cooperation in this decade of the nineties."

Ms. Oaken issued this challenge to BPW/NC: If the Kentucky Wildcats lose a basketball game to Duke, Wake Forest, or NC State, Kentucky will host a wine and cheese party for North Carolina at the National Convention in Reno, Nevada this July. "We expect North Carolina to host the party if Kentucky wins," she said.

In keeping with the first-year "political" theme of BPW's three-year "Building WomenPower: Politically, Professionally, and Personally" plan, the Legislative Day program included workshop sessions emphasizing women's changing role in today's government.

Workshop leaders included Jan Parker, Director of Boards and Commissions, Office of the Governor; Christie Barbee, Director of the Office of Citizen Affairs; Deborah Steely, Lobbyist for the Planned Parenthood Program; Carolyn Williams, former candidate for the House; and panelist Mary Ray Oaken; Lacy Maddox, Past local President and moderator; Nancy Webster, BPW/NC President; and Patrice Alexander, BPW/NC President-Elect.

A women's luncheon held at the Cardinal Club in downtown Raleigh honored the 28 women legislators, six of whom are members of BPW. The women legislators were given information packets about BPW at the luncheon. The Honorable Ruth Easterling introduced her sister legislators to her fellow BPW members. Justice Sarah Parker received a standing ovation for her achievement as the first woman on the North Carolina Supreme Court.

BPW members were given special recognition in the afternoon session of the House of Representatives. After the sessions adjourned, members visited in their legislators' offices.

The group reconvened in the Legislative Building for closing remarks by President Nancy Webster. "What a great day this has been to build a relationship with our political leaders of North Carolina," she said. "What this means to women cannot be finitely measured. However, we know that through the political process we can accomplish our goals and be most effective."

"We have gained respect and recognition from our legislators. They gave us a standing ovation in the House of Representatives and they did not have to do that. For years to come, we'll not realize the difference we have made here today for working women," she said.

Attending Legislative Day

Edenton Business and Professional Women's Club members attending Legislative Day in Raleigh on February 18 were: (l-r) Clara Boswell, Beth Taylor, Hettie Wallace, and Nancy Winslow. Mrs. Winslow is president of the Edenton club.

PROTECTING AGAINST CATARACTS

Sooner or later, if they live long enough, everyone will get cataracts, the clouding of the natural lens over the eye. In most cases, cataracts are part of the normal aging process and slowly the lens is less able to focus light to help us see.

To some extent, it is possible to protect against cataracts, or at least to delay their appearance. Basic: wear sunglasses outdoors to protect against ultraviolet light. Stop smoking; smokers are more susceptible to cataracts than non-smokers. Recent studies indicate that good nutrition and adequate levels of of vitamin C and E also can help to prevent cataracts.

If your vision has gotten worse over a period of time, if colors do not seem as bright as they used to be, or if you notice glare from lights at night, these may be symptoms of a developing cataract. But there may be no symptoms at all, so regular eye examinations are recommended.
