School - is currently working on a schematic design of the proposed facility - at no charge to the county. The facility will not be as high-priced as some other construction projects, said.Copeland.

"It's not like building a hospital or office space, it's not that costly," he said, noting that such an open-spaced facility is inexpensive because of its limited design features.

Copeland said that no official size or cost for the facility has been brought to county oficials.

Smith said Deckard's site plan could be completed by the end of the year.

"Hopefully we'll have that design) in place in the next week or two," said Smith.

And then there's the issue of ow the county will pay for the rand-new facility. Thanks to he recent leasing of Chowan lospital, the county is in good inancial condition. Copeland added that there would be no ax increase as a result of fundng the proposed facility.

Copeland said that commisioners might decide to use arned-interest revenues from he leasing of Chowan Hospital to University Health Systems earlier this year. He said that the board could decide to include funding for the proposed recreational facility in a five-year spending plan associated with the $30 million windfall from the hospital deal. "We have not expended the first penny yet (on the recreational facility)," Copeland emphasized.

The county manager also offered a step-by-step process by which the proposed facility may become a reality. If the grant is approved, said Copeland, the school board and county commissioners will hammer out a joint agreement. The approval of a final design will follow the agreement, with construction of the facility rounding out the plans.

Adams said that the middle school site will save the county in construction costs, as parking lots, water/sewer services, and baseball and football fields are already in place there.

"We will also have the opportunity to offer some good af-ter-school programs," Adams said. "It's just going to be a great project."

Smith said that the school board would address the issue at its January meeting.

Copeland said that the county commissioners' finance committee would look at the issue after the first of the year.
