Gov. Charles Brantley Aycock, the turn-of-the-century chief executive who is widely considered the founder of universal public education in North Carolina and who is one of Hunt's historical idols.

Smith says he's "actively considering (the office) but out of respect for Harlan I wouldn't do a thing until he says he's not going to run." Boyles, while refusing to announce who his "worthy successor" might be, said he was keeping mum until that person was ready to announce. Smith said he's unwilling to focus on the job, in any capacity, until after Exploris opens. In separate interviews, the two refused to announce that they are dance partners, but refused to deny it, either.

The Boyles-Smith tango has the potential to affect other races. The scuttlebutt of late had Richard Moore, the star TV personality of the state's disaster relief press conferences and state secretary of crime control and public safety, running for treasurer especially if the office were open.

But Moore would have a tough race against someone of Smith's stature. That could lead Moore to stick to his original plan to run for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, a nod also being pursued by Sen. Beverly Perdue of New Bern. Smith worked for the Governor's Crime Commission for 15 years, eight of them as director under Hunt.

VOTE

TOWN COUNCIL

Jimmy has lived in Edenton 23 years; has been a member of the Zoning Board since 1989; and has been an Edenton/Chowan Business man for almost 30 years.

A VOTE FOR JIMMY IS A VOTE FOR PROGRESS IN EDENTON.

I strongly support Progress for the Town of Edenton. Our history is very important and may certainly be an important part of the future of this town. Progress can and will arrive in various forms: when it does, I will do my best to evaluate it fairly and with an open mind; judging the issue on it's own merits and for the good of the citizens of Edenton.

For Example:

- I fully support the purchase of the Steamers Baseball Team. The profits derived from the Steamers will go to promote Amateur Sports for Edenton. I will do all I can to insure these dollars will go to support all sports, for all people.
- We need to make Edenton attractive to business and industry, while protecting our environment through careful planning.
- I have only one Campaign promise: that I will treat each issue and each person that comes before the council with the utmost respect and unbiased attention.

Another death brought this response: "My God! How many awful trials of this kind are we doomed to sustain only in the course of a very short life! And what would be human existence but for the hope of a better and happier futurity!'

The demands on Iredell increased with the death of Justice James Wilson in 1798, and as illness and accidents befell other members of the court. 'The extraordinary fatigue I underwent made my head ache a little yesterday, though it did not prevent my attending the court," he wrote from Philadelphia in May of 1799, where he was presiding over the trials of six men for treason. At that time, he faced court dates in Richmond, to be followed by a term of the Supreme Court back in Philadelphia in August. Recognizing, perhaps, his precarious health, he wrote: "If I am alive and well, I will certainly be there."

His family was extremely worried about him, and encouraged him to rest: "Your life is an object of more important consideration to the public than any temporary omission...to say nothing of what you owe to your friends, and more particularly your family - a family which...will be a comfort to you while you live, and do honor to your memory when you are no more," Samuel Johnston, his beloved friend and brother-inlaw, reminded him.

Iredell was "too much indisposed to attend the Supreme Court," in Philadelphia in August; he returned to Edenton. "If his vacation restored him to the comforts of home, it brought little relaxation to his active brain," Griffith J. McRee wrote in his two volume compilation of Iredell papers. "The pillars of his constitution, often rudely shaken in his youth, began now to totter to their fall. The quick eye of his wife soon detected the faded cheek and wasting form. Judge Iredell's indisposition, baffling the skill of his physician, began now to assume a fatal character. The shadows were deepening around him; the night was at hand."

The funeral service for Justice James Iredell was held at St. Paul's Church, and "the lamentation of a whole community constituted a tribute to his merit, honorable indeed." The Right Reverend Charles Pettigrew, Bishop of the Diocese of North Carolina, "delivered over the body of his departed friend a funeral discourse...and Judge Iredell's
