

Fourth in Preservation video series profiles Edenton, other sites

Preservation North Carolina announces the completion of its fourth video production on historic preservation, At Work and At Play. This one-hour program shows the impact industrialization had on North Carolinians at the turn of the 20th century. Filmed at six North Carolina locations, it tells the story of how its citizens worked and played in this new economy and how their architecture reflected those changes. At Work and At Play aired on UNC-TV this spring.

A massive migration from the backwoods to the towns took place a generation after the Civil War. For the first time in North Carolina's history, many of its citizens worked in factories and mills rather than on the farm. How these people worked and the nature of their social networks were fundamentally different from that of their parents who lived in rural isolation. The architecture was also very different, as hand-wrought simplicity gave way to machine-made exuberance. In town, handsome mills, large mill villages, picturesque homes, churches and stores were built by textile, tobacco and furniture entrepreneurs.

How North Carolinians played

also changed. For the wealthy and the burgeoning middle class, resorts, camps for children, and religious retreats sprang up in both the mountains and along the coast. Factory workers had their own forms of recreation, such as mill-sponsored baseball teams.

Photographic images from this period are plentiful, and fascinating stories are still handed down. At Work and At Play includes documentary photographs of buildings, places and people; interviews with North Carolina natives, social historians, and preservationists; and beautiful footage of preserved places. Among the places featured are the Glencoe Mill and mill village in Alamance County (a town built along the Haw River in the 1880s and settled largely by Virginia mountaineers), Edenton Cotton Mill and mill village in Edenton (founded in 1899 and settled by poor farmers from rural Tyrrell County), Richmond Hill in Asheville (an opulent home built in the 1890s and beautifully adapted as an inn), early beach cottages at Nags Head, High Victorian mountain resorts in Flat Rock, camps and religious retreats in Linville.

Preservation North Carolina has produced three other one-hour videos: A Passion for Place, which explores the legacy of over 200 years of Tar Heel architectural heritage; On the Tracks of Progress, a history of the impact of the railroad on commerce, transportation and architecture in 1800s NC; and Four Fetched and Dear Bought: Four Architects Who Changed North Carolina, which covers the important NC works on 19th century architect Alexander Jackson Davis, and 20th century architects Richard Sharp Smith, Julian Abele and George Matsumoto. All of these programs have aired on UNC-TV.

At Work and At Play is a co-production of Preservation North Carolina and Mark Spano Communications Inc., in association with UNC-TV. Funding for this program has been generously provided by the A.J. Fletcher Foundation, the Michel Family Foundation, and the John Wesley and Anna Hodgkin Hanes Foundation.

Operation Fan/Heat Relief provides heat relief to NC elderly population

RALEIGH, NC - Operation Fan/Heat Relief, a special project that provides fans to the elderly, is now underway in all 100 North Carolina counties.

The fans are being purchased with donations from the Duke Energy Foundation ($40,000), Carolina Power and Light Company ($20,000), North Carolina Power ($2,500) and Valassis Communications Inc. ($500,000). The project is being managed through the Division of Aging of the NC Department of Health and Human Services.

Karen Gottovi, director of the Division of Aging, said the elderly are particularly vulnerable to heat exhaustion in the summer heat and humidity. "Chronic health problems in older persons require medication which affects the body's natural defenses against heat," said Gottovi. "The electric fans provide the comfort and relief to cope with the heat and allow an older person to remain healthier in his or her own home."

Last summer, 3,545 older adults received fans through Operation Fan/Heat Relief. Older residents of North Carolina who meet the program's guidelines may obtain fans through local council or county departments on aging.

For more information, call June Barbour at the NC Division of Aging, (919) 733-3983.

Rules

The replacement structure must not be larger than the original.

The buffer requirement will not apply to those coastal shorelines where the state Environmental Management Commission (EMC) adopts its own buffer standards. The EMC regulates development along rivers statewide. Such rules already exist in the Neuse and Tar-Pamlico river basins.

The 30-foot buffer was the result of more than two years of CRC discussions about ways to increase protection of coastal water quality. In a unanimous vote in March 1999, the 15-member commission chose to set aside earlier, more stringent proposals for protecting coastal water quality and focus on the buffer requirement. The proposal would have called for a 75-foot buffer along coastal shorelines, among other measures.

The CRC and Division of Coastal Management sought extensive public comment on the 30-foot buffer rules last summer, conducting 41 public hearings in coastal counties. Nearly 400 people commented on the rules, voicing opinions both for and against them. The CRC adopted the rules in November after adding exceptions and other languages recommended during the public hearing process.
