

Mayberry focus of new arrival

You'll be sure to smile when you pick up Mayberry Memories: The Andy Griffith Show Photo Album. The eight seasons of the show began in 1960 and endure as re-runs to this day. And everybody has a favorite episode. Remember when Opie shot the bird with his slingshot?

Seabiscuit: An American Legend was a rags-to-riches horse whose dismal early racing career was eclipsed by his later performances. Bought for a song and trained by two unlikely candidates, Seabiscuit became a popular favorite in the late 1930s when the country struggled through the Great Depression.

American Furniture: Understanding Styles, Construction and Quality features diagrams and thorough explanations of styles from the early seventeenth century to the early twentieth century. How cabinetmakers created their styles and how you can train your eye to recognize them are the themes of the book. The author encourages collectors to love the ratty look of old pieces rather than ruin them with refinishing.

Here's one for the believe-it-or-not category. William F. Buckley's new novel features Elvis Presley. The premise is as follows: A friendship that began when Elvis was in the Army in Germany continues even though the two young men take very different paths in life. Buckley uses the characters to chronicle America during the 1960s in Elvis in the Morning.

From E. Lynn Harris, Any Way the Wind Blows is another steamy chapter in the lives of former football star Basil Henderson and singing sensation Yancey Braxton.

Jeff Shaara's Rise to Rebellion is a novel of the American Revolution and is told from the perspective of American historical figures. The book opens with the Boston Massacre when lawyer John Adams must defend the British peacekeepers who fired on civilian colonists. The book is the first of two planned by the author on this crucial period in American history.

A television journalist loses his left hand (while the cameras are rolling) in a freak accident. He then becomes involved in a chain of events that hopefully will lead to a hand transplant. Reviewers are calling The Fourth Hand by John Irving both poignant and funny.

Big Cherry Holler by Adriana Trigiani, a sequel to Big Stone Gap, returns to that rural Virginia community to pick up the stories of Ave Maria and her friends and neighbors.

In Summer Light by Luanne Rice, May, a professional wedding planner, has little use for marriage herself until she meets a professional hockey player whose public persona hides inner rage and isolation (which she, of course, can cure).

Tres Navarre, private detective and English teacher, takes a summer teaching job at the University of Texas hoping for a respite from his practice in San Antonio. But once there he becomes entangled in a Texas-size case that involves big oil money, a corporate takeover and love, hate, and revenge. It's all in The Devil Went Down to Austin.

Old money and manners in the Hamptons provide an aura of respectability in Misfortune, a novel of suspense by Nancy Geary. The county's star prosecutor goes into an exclusive country club in Southampton when a list of murder suspects includes its prominent members.

Little Theatre seeks help with fall play

The Edenton Little Theatre has scheduled auditions for its next production, "Love, Sex and the IRS," on Aug. 15-16 at 7:30 p.m. at the Edenton United Methodist Church.

The play has roles for three women — two younger, ages 25-35, and one older, perhaps 40 to 50. Also needed are five men — two younger (ages 25-35), an older gentleman to portray the IRS agent, another older man to play the part of the landlord and yet another older "mystery man".

"Anyone will be permitted to try out, whether you're a seasoned actor or a first-time performer," said Bud Weagly, ELT spokesman.

"We feel that this play, which has been described as a "wild farce," is going to be a very exciting one, both for the performers and the public."

The play is scheduled to run Nov. 9-10 at the White Oak Elementary School on Hwy. 32 North and will be a dinner theatre.

Anyone needing more information is encouraged to call 482-2570 for details.
