Former range manager sentenced in federal case

From staff reports

RALEIGH — A former U.S. Navy range manager convicted in a six-vear scheme to steal property from the U.S. Department of Defense has been sentenced to a year in a half in federal prison.

U.S. District Court Judge James C. Dever III on Friday sentenced Harry C. Mann. 80 of Manns Harbor, to 18 months in prison and ordered him to pay $149,999 in restitution to the federal government and a $75,000 at practice targets, and as property or reusing it for fine, a press release from the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Eastern District of North Carolina states.

Mann pleaded guilty to accepting illegal gratuities in October.

According to the federal government, Mann had been employed by the Navy at a practice bombing range southwest of Manteo since 1968. Both Navy and Marines aviators use the range as a place to drop inert bombs and fire live rounds range manager, Mann's job was to construct and maintain the targets

Between January 2005 and May 2011, the government said, Mann requisitioned nearly $16 million in surplus government property, including trucks, excavators, bulldozers, cranes and trailers. Mann got the property from the property from DoD's Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, the agency charged with disposing of excess military purposes.

According to court documents, prosecutors alleged that Mann allowed two recycling operators based in Chowan County - Rudy Lozano and John Williams — to take the government-owned property from the bombing range and sell it for scrap metal. The two recyclers would then pay Mann kickbacks that totalled $175,000, the government said.

Mann demanded the two scrappers pay him in cash when they were alone so the payments could not be observed by others, the government said. One cash payment for $16,300 was paid to Mann at his home on May 18, 2011. The government claimed Mann had the local scrapper put the payment in equipment being transported in the Edenton area and alerted the Navy, which initiated an investigation. The Navy Criminal Investigative Service, the Department of Defense Investigative Service, and the Defense Logistics Agency, Office of the Inspector General, ended up taking part in the probe.

to rural North Carolina, Steinburg said.

Steinburg said the number of kids participating in the program at Edenton was remarkable

"I was blown away by the numbers - happily blown away," Steinburg said.

Steinburg noted that smaller libraries such Edenton's generally are part of a regional library system.

I think this has helped our library and other libraries like it," Steinburg said.

Summer Reading included 26 programs over a 10- week period. Counting kids and the adults who came with them there were 1,336 people who participated in the programs. Sixty-five Soda Shoppe ice cream cone certificates were given out for reading group read an estimated 1.500 books this summer.

There were 31 children including Jayla Phelps who read 46

One of the highlights of Shelton's magic show was who read 30 books or more, his account of learning about magic when he was a fifth-grader. The first day he

The participants as a went to the school library there was one book about magic, which was what he was interested in. He read that book and learned as much about magic as he could.

> But throughout the school year additional books about magic became part of the collection. He read everything he could get his hands on about magic.

By the end of the year there were 11 books about magic in the school library.

Shelton said he learned at his 40th high school reunion that his teacher had bought the other 10 books about magic and donated them to the library so he would have books to read about magic. He told the children that reading could open pathways for them the same way it had opened for him a pathway to being a magician.

One of the most popular tricks Shelton performed was stuffing a box with loose sheets of paper, placing a lid on it, and then lifting a lid to reveal a box full of dollar bills. He then repeated the closing and opening of the box, revealing a rabbit in the box where the money had been.

"The only thing better than a box full of money is a box filled with a bunny," Shelton said as the rabbit appeared inside the box.

The trick not only delighted the kids but also had the adults in the room turning to each other and asking, "How'd he do that?
