the N.C. Geodetic Survey. The purpose of the Geodetic Survey section is to establish precisely located monuments on the North Carolina grid system and benchmarks.
 Harding said he's currently working on seven different projects. He said the process usually takes about two years.

 "It's possible it could take more, it depends on the workload," Harding said.
 The location of the county line between Franklin and Granville counties is one of the projects Harding is working on.
 The quest to determine the actual dividing line involves research into historical records as well as field work to survey the site. Once the final location is found, the Geodetic Survey drives irons into the ground so people can locate them in the future.

 In 1929 when officials in Guilford and Randolph counties finally determined their actual boundary, they posted granite markers with a "G" on one side for Guilford and an "R" on the other for Randolph.

he said, and it has moved in the direction of progressively more responsible positions.
 "The role of president is something that will be new for me," Wynegar said.
 In addition to looking forward to the new role, Wynegar also is looking forward to the food in northeastern North Carolina.

ground is an academics and said he looks forward to working closely with the faculty at COA.

"I have looked at some of the data, and the faculty do an amazing job of taking care of the students," Wynegar said. "I'm sure we can continue that and possibly even improve it."

Wynegar said he would need to spend some time on the ground at COA before commenting on new curriculum programs or other changes he might be interested in pursuing.

O'Neal said he expects to have a signed contract from Wynegar by the end of the week. He declined comment on Wynegar's salary, allowances or other details of compensation until he receives the signed contract.

A source close to the COA president search process, however, said Wynegar will be paid $179,000 a year. That's less than the $185,000 a year Deitemeyer was being paid when she left.

Wynegar was one of four finalists for the president's job who were considered for the job and who visited all four COA campuses earlier this month. The other three were Gene Smith, a vice president at Wayne Community College in Goldsboro; Keith Mackie, a vice president at Catawba Valley Community College in Hickory; and Deborah Grimes, a vice president at Lenoir Community College in Kinston.

O'Neal said he wanted to thank all trustees who had helped in the search that led to Wynegar's selection.

"I would like to express my wholehearted gratitude to each and every member of the Presidential Search Committee for their dedication and their hard work on behalf of COA," he said.
