said. "Every day our values are under attack from the political establishment who either hates our values or hides from the fight. They would rather do nothing than stand against the tide, because they only care about their popularity with political insiders. When we need them to stand for us, they are nowhere to be found — and this area deserves better than that."

Also filing for the Legislature on Monday was Eddy Goodwin, a former state Ferry Division director and Chowan Commissioner. Goodwin is seeking the open seat in House District 1 that Steinburg is vacating for his state Senate bid. Following redistricting, House District 1 now includes Bertie, Camden, Chowan, Perquimans, Tyrrell and Washington counties.

"It is a humbling experience to actively be involved in the process of government at any level," he said. "I have been fortunate to be actively involved in the process at different levels by a calling to serve others. That is the way I was raised as a child and I still adhere to that teaching I received at home and in my Christian faith. I look forward to serving all the citizens of the NC House District 1."

Also filing for re-election on Monday was state Rep. Howard Hunter III, D-Hertford. Hunter is seeking re-election in the newly drawn House District 5, which includes Pasquotank, Gates and Hertford counties.

In the only other legislative district with local impact, Democrat Tess Judge filed to run against state Rep. Beverly Boswell, R-Dare, who also filed, in the newly drawn House District 6.

In the largest race affecting northeastern North Carolina this year, Law, a Marine veteran and Jacksonville resident, became the first candidate to file for the race, based on a spreadsheet summarizing Monday's filings from the State Board of Elections and Ethics Enforcement. Jones, a 12-term GOP congressman, has already announced he plans to seek re-election. Also planning a bid for the seat is Scott Dacey, a Republican Craven County commissioner running as a strong supporter of President Donald Trump.

Law ran in the 2016 GOP primary against Jones, garnering only 20 percent of the vote but garnering more votes than Taylor Griffin for second place. In a statement announcing his candidacy on Sunday, Law argued, like Dacey, that Jones is not supporting Trump enough on curbing illegal immigration or other issues.

"Our people deserve better than what they have now — and I will fight for eastern North Carolina in DC like I did for America over in Iraq," Law said.

In House District 6, Boswell is running to serve a district reconfigured following successful lawsuits against Republican gerrymanders across the state, and would serve Dare, Currituck, Hyde and Pamlico counties if re-elected.

Boswell, a former Dare County commissioner, commented in an email announcement that she's supported cutting taxes and eliminating burdensome regulations to benefit district residents and businesses. She also touted her strong attendance record at the General Assembly, claiming to have been present for 943 out of 956 votes since January 2017, while still working at a medical clinic in Nags Head.

Vying also for the District 6 seat is Judge, a Democrat who's also from Dare County. In an announcement released by the NC House Democratic Caucus, Judge said she's a local businesswoman who's worked in hospital management. She said district residents deserve a "tireless representative who will listen, and be responsive to their concerns and will provide timely constituent services."

Judge's late husband, Warren, ran against Boswell in 2016, but died in the week leading up to the November election. Democratic leaders tabbed Tess Judge to be the replacement nominee, but her name did not appear on the ballot.

Though not citing any experience in elected office, Judge said her leadership roles through the Outer Banks Chamber of Commerce and Outer Banks Hospital, the latter of which she still serves as a board member, are among her qualifications to serve in the Legislature. The announcement also states that "investing in education and job training" will be themes of her campaign.

Filing for the May primaries continues through Feb. 28.

Chowan County deserve the best possible representation on the Board of Commissioners and I expect to provide that," he said.

Smith has served two terms as a commissioner.

"I've enjoyed serving the community and being a commissioner," said Smith, chairman of the commission. "We have come a long way since the financial crisis of 2008, but we could very easily go back into that situation. I'd like to stay on board to keep the county on a strong financial heading."

John Mitchener, a Democrat, filed for re-election to his District 2, Seat 2 on the commission board.

Mitchener has served two terms as commissioner.

"We've re-financed four bond issues to save the county $10 million dollars. There's much more progress that Chowan County can make," he said. "I hope to contribute to do that. We must continue to be a welcoming community."

Also filing for re-election was Mike McArthur, the county's Democratic clerk of Superior Court.

"My family and I have devoted our lives to serving Chowan County, and it has been an honor and a privilege," McArthur said. "I have just filed to begin my seventh four year term. I look forward to many more productive years assisting others through circumstances outside their comfort zone and usually well beyond their control."

practices have been done with the safety of patients, families and our team members in mind," she said. "We welcome healthy visitors who are 12 years of age and older, with the exception that a well child under 12 years of age can visit a newborn sibling."

"Our experts are tracking flu activity and as soon as the flu decreases, we will again welcome family and visitors of all ages," she added. "Family and visitors of any age should not come to the hospital if they have symptoms of a cold or flu, fever, diarrhea, vomiting or headaches."

Herr said that the hospital continues to encourage everyone who has not yet gotten a flu shot to get one as soon as possible.

"We are still recommending for those not vaccinated to get vaccinated, and it is important to practice hand washing and cough hygiene as a step to prevent the spread of germs and the flu," she said.

Herr suggested those seeking more information about flu prevention, symptoms and treatment could visit <https://www.cdc.gov/flu/index.htm>.
